"At 3WS, we went with the whole program."

"We've actually been using The Research Group for four or five years. But about 18 months ago, we switched from having them just conduct an occasional study to going with their whole program: strategic Studies regularly, music testing and pre-testing of commercials. And we've really tried to follow their guidance very closely.

The results? Over the past year, 3WS has moved from 3.9 to 5.4 to 6.3 overall (12+ Mon.-Sun. AQH share) and we now place only about 3 points behind market giant KDKA in 25 to 54 adults! And we weathered a serious offensive attack by a competitor in the process.

The Research Group people are our partners in success."

"Naturally, independents are important to me because they keep my costs per point in line."

"But what I really like about WUAB is that they don’t relate to being an independent. They relate to being a television station."

"We’re looking mostly for a demographic of 25 to 54 adult. And WUAB delivers it. They do a great job with the Cleveland Indians. Their promos are the best I’ve seen. They even go out of the market on cable."

"You have to realize that independent Gaylord stations, like WUAB, can’t always assume they’re going to get a chunk of your budget. So they do try harder to put together a good package for you."

"WUAB is one of the finest independents I’ve ever worked with. From beginning to end, they really are professionals."

Dennis R. Patrick, associate director of White House's presidential personnel office, is expected to be nominated as successor to resigned FCC Commissioner Anne Jones any time. Senate Republican Policy Committee was running Patrick's name around Senate last week for political clearance. Hill source said he wasn't aware of any Senate opposition. He also said he expected that White House will give Senate Commerce Committee official word in September. Patrick, 31, is lawyer. He served as clerk for former California Supreme Court Judge Bill Clark, Reagan confidant and now assistant to President for national security affairs.

Coming and going

ABC-TV last week ordered two more prime time series from 20th Century-Fox Television, bringing total of latter's prime time production for next season to what may be all-time record of 10 hours per week. Series, ordered for possible airing starting in November, are Masquerade, hour-long adventure about undercover agents who, once their cover is blown, must work through different amateurs each week, and Automan, hour-long high-tech adventure featuring computerized crime solver who can materialize as holographic image. Both are from Glen Larson Productions.

To make room for new entries, ABC-TV is said to be considering cancelling Fantasy Island, about to enter seventh season and airing Saturday at 10 p.m., and Happy Days and Just Our Luck, set for airing in fall on Tuesday at 8 p.m. and 8:30 p.m.

House version of S. 66

House Telecommunications Subcommittee staff will begin drafting cable deregulation legislation during August recess (Congress has adjourned until Sept. 12). Bill, according to subcommittee source, will focus on thrust of Senate bill S. 66, but will also take different approach in some areas. House bill won't provide for eventual deregulation of phone companies that provide same data transmission delivery service as cable operators. Unlike Senate bill, House measure will include requirement for commercial leased access channels and will permit cities during renewal proceeding to require upgrading of channels. Like S. 66, measure is likely to contain some form of rate deregulation.

Into marketplace

Christopher D. Coursen, communications counsel for Senate Commerce Committee, is joining Washington law firm of O'Connor & Hannan (also of Minneapolis), to form telecommunications division there. Coursen, who spent three years with committee will also be handling legislative matters for firm. He begins Sept. 1.

Pinch

CBS's cost-reduction program has reached CBS Sports: Cameras used in covering National Football League "A" games—those going to most of country—will be reduced to six per game (from seven or eight in past), and videotape machines will be cut to three (from three or four). On other NFL games there'll be five or four cameras instead of five or six, and two or three videotape machines instead of three or four. Nobody's saying how much this will save, but cost of sports coverage is usually measured by number of cameras used, and, as one CBS source said, "since we're covering five or six games a weekend, the savings should be pretty considerable." No decision yet on college football coverage, where fewer games are involved.

While equipment is being cut, staff of CBS Sports's pre-, mid- and post-game NFL Today is being expanded. To be announced shortly is addition of Charlie Cantey, CBS horse-racing analyst and features reporter, to do feature reports from NFL cities. When Phyllis George (Mrs. John Y. Brown) decides pregnancy requires her to take time out—baby reportedly is due in December—Cantey will replace her, joining Brent Musberger at NFL Today anchor desk.

Before they're hatched

Representative Tim Wirth (D-Colo.) and Henry Waxman (D-Calif.), chief sponsors of H.R. 2250 which would bar FCC from altering its financial interest and domestic syndication rules, apparently felt confident measure would be reported out of House Telecommunications Subcommittee last Wednesday (Aug. 3). Notice in Aug. 3 Congressional Record states that bill was reported out. Waxman and Wirth, chairman of subcommittee, had confidently counted votes, but subcommittee ran out of time and vote was delayed due to successful lobbying campaign by opponents (see page 30.)

Chutzpah

Reader's Digest, which has played up—or, as some would say, overplayed—TV network audience erosion in its recent advertising, apparently has new campaign in mind. Posey, Parry & Quest agency, Greenwich, Conn., sent letter to NBC saying it wanted to do half-dozen or so Digest ads featuring characters from TV hits of years ago. What it wanted from NBC was permission to use Maxwell Smart, lead character in Get Smart series, in ad in which Smart would talk about—that's right—erosion of network audiences. Letter, apparently written with straight face, got straight-faced answer from NBC attorneys: No.

Price rising

What's worth of Chicago-based Tribune Co., which is awaiting favorable market to go public, as approved by stockholders last April? Latest inside evaluation is $100,500 a share as of last June 30, up from $80,500 as of March 21. With 7,395 shares outstanding among fewer than 400 stockholders, that puts total worth of publishing-broadcasting-cable company in $750-million range.

More news

Circle 7 Productions, programing arm of ABC's owned and operated stations division, will launch news-program distribution service to be known as Newsbank. Described as similar to Group W's Newsfeed service, Newsbank will distribute approximately two dozen stories per week, primarily features, collected from ABC's five O&O's in New York, Chicago, Detroit, Los Angeles and San Francisco, to subscribing stations.

Pitch

National Association of Broadcasters is hosting luncheon briefing this week (Aug. 9) for staffs of House Telecommunications Subcommittee and its parent, House Energy and Commerce Committee. Briefing is part of association's effort to explain what broadcasters want in regulatory relief. Instead of NAB lobbyists at podium, local TV and radio broadcasters will make case for deregulation. Broadcasters slated to meet with congressional staff include Joel Chaseman of Post-Newsweek Stations; Andrew Ockershausen, WMAL (AM) Washington, and Rich Adams, WJLA-TV Washington.
Showtime for ABC?

With the apparent collapse of the Showtime-Movie Channel merger two weeks ago, given the Justice Department’s refusal to accept even a modified version of the plan as proposed by Viacom, MCA, Paramount, Warner Brothers and American Express, ABC may again become involved in talks to become a partner in Showtime. “I don’t preclude the possibility of those talks reopening,” said Herb Granath, president of ABC Video Enterprises, referring to negotiations that went on between his company and Viacom last fall.

Granath’s statement came last week at a luncheon where he presented members of the New York chapter of the National Academy of Television Arts and Sciences with a status report on his company’s various activities.

He acknowledged that RSVP, the pay-per-view joint venture between ABC Video Enterprises and ESPN, lost money on its first presentation seen earlier this year—a four-bout boxing package known as the Crown Affair—but the marketing structure allowed for the local cable operators to make money on it, he said. (Operators received 45% of the revenues paid by viewers.) The fact that boxing promoter Don King was taken in as a partner for that first event, and the heavy marketing, distribution and promotional costs absorbed by RSVP, were cited as reasons for the losses.

Granath dismissed rumors that the ABC-Group W partnership in Satellite News Channel was going sour, but added, “We could use a few more advertising dollars.” He said that SNC currently reaches about seven million cable subscribers and should reach what he described as a “critical mass” of 12 million subscribers by perhaps the end of the first quarter of 1984. Once critical mass is reached, he suggested, advertisers will be less reluctant to purchase time on that service. SNC II, the proposed long-form service that would be similar to the CNN format, has been put on hold, perhaps permanently, but at least until advertiser demand for time on cable services improves significantly.

Granath said that the company was encouraged with initial testing concerning consumer acceptance of pay-per-view events that has been conducted at Cox’s San Diego system. If further tests prove successful, the two companies hope to launch a pay-per-view business known as First Ticket.

Granath also confirmed that ABC Video has talked with a number of DBS entrepreneurs about possibly supplying programs to those operators, but said, “we are not close” to any deals at this time.

Another victory for the First

The U.S. District Court in Miami struck down a city ordinance that would have allowed the city manager to revoke the cable franchise of Miami Cablevision for carrying programing the manager deemed “obscene or indecent.”

In enjoining the city from enforcing the ordinance, Judge William Hoeveler invoked the First and Fourteenth Amendments. “The city’s effort to regulate the distribution through cable television of ‘indecent’ material violates the First Amendment guarantee of free speech,” he ruled. “Moreover, the methods adopted by the city to enforce the regulation and exclusion of ‘indecent’ and ‘obscene’ material violate the notion of fairness implicit in one’s right to due process of law.”

The ordinance, enacted last January, states: “No person shall by means of a cable television system knowingly distribute by wire or cable any obscene or indecent materials.” The ordinance further stipulates that the city manager should review complaints about “obscene or indecent” programing on the cable system. If, after an informal hearing, the manager found the programing to violate the ordinance, he or she could impose a number of sanctions on the cable system, including suspension or revocation of its franchise.

The ordinance was challenged by Ruben Cruz, a Miami Cablevision subscriber, and Home Box Office, which is carried by the system. Under the definitions contained in the ordinance, some of the HBO programing could have been construed as “obscene or indecent.”

The National Cable Television Association was quick to praise the decision. “This is the third in a series of federal court decisions that uphold the cable operator’s First Amendment rights,” said NCTA President Thomas Wheeler. “This is good news for cable viewers because it strikes a blow at unnecessary and unconstitutional program content control.” As in a similar case with a similar decision in Roy City, Utah, he said, “the court has distinguished cable from broadcast television and aligned it with the print media.”

Ready to roll

Although the plan for combining Cable Health Network and Daytime into a single advertiser-supported cable service has yet to receive the final approval of the companies involved, the merger appears to be a fait accompli. “We are moving ahead under the assumption that the merger will be approved,” said an official with one of the companies.

Further evidence of the fact: Seven new vice presidents have been appointed at Hearst/ABC/Viacom Entertainment Services (HAVES), the new entity that will operate the CHN-Daytime service. The appointments follow by about six weeks the appointment of CHN’s Bruce Johnson and Hearst/ABC’s Mary Alice Dwyer-Dobbin as president and vice president of programing, respectively, of HAVES.

Last week’s appointments: Don Andersson, vice president, affiliate relations. He served in the same position for CHN.

David Bender, vice president, research and marketing. He was director of research at CHN.

That van looks familiar. Showtime has launched two video production vans, one of which bears an uncanny resemblance to Groucho Marx, on a nationwide search for the funniest person in America. After the tour, the funniest person will be chosen from 51 state finalists and will appear on Showtime as the comic of the month. Last week the vans visited Boston, Philadelphia and Washington, where open auditions attracted between 30 and 50 comics.
Marc Chalom, vice president, production and operations. He served in the same capacity at Hearst/ABC.

Arthur G. Cooper, vice president, administration, and assistant to the president. He served as CHN's vice president, finance and administration.

Al Husted, vice president, public relations and public affairs. He served as director of public relations at Hearst/ABC.

Seymour H. Lesser, vice president, finance. He was vice president, administration and finance at Hearst/ABC.

David J. Moore, vice president, advertising sales. Moore was vice president and national sales director at CHN.

What shape will the new service take? Herb Granath, president, ABC Video Enterprises, said at a New York luncheon last week: "We know roughly what it will look like—not a whole lot different" from what the two services look like now. Bruce Johnson is working hard, he said, to come up with the best programing mix. It's almost certain that the new service will be on the air by the end of the year (using CHN's transponder 17 on Satcom III-R), he added, but probably not before Nov. 1.

Mulling it over

The Mountain States Legal Foundation is mulling over its next move after a U.S. District Court judge in Denver dismissed its suit challenging the constitutionality of exclusive cable franchises on the ground it lacked standing.

According to MSLF attorney Clint Bolick, the conservative legal foundation has at least four options: It can ask Judge Jim R. Carrigan for rehearing on the motion for dismissal. It can amend its original complaint and start all over again. It can appeal the decision to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 10th Circuit. Or, it can drop the case.

MSLF filed the suit in October 1982 against Mile Hi Cablevision Associates Ltd., the partnership of American Television & Communications and Daniels & Associates that won the cable franchise for Denver, and the city of Denver. The Denver-based foundation, which at one time was headed by Interior Secretary James Watt, charged that Denver's award of a de facto exclusive franchise to Mile Hi violated the First Amendment rights of Denver's citizens by limiting the number of systems that could serve them.

The suit sent shock waves through the cable industry. Although a ruling in favor of the MSLF would free cable from local regulation, it would create an environment in which several cable systems could compete for subscribers in a market. Such competition is anathema to most cable operators, especially the big-city operators who promised many uneconomic services and facilities to win their cable franchises.

Judge Carrigan was unconfident that MSLF or any of its members were injured by the award of the franchise to Mile Hi, which MSLF had to prove to establish its standing in the case. MSLF alleged it was injured by the award of a de facto exclusive franchise, he said, but the franchise agreement contains no guarantee of exclusivity. "Nothing precludes Denver from ever granting a franchise to another cable company or consortium may well succeed to Mile Hi's position."

Bolick was unable to say last week what MSLF would do, but was sanguine about an appeal. "We feel it is an appealable decision," he said. "It was not a sound decision by the trial court. The possibility of challenging it on legal grounds looks pretty strong."

CNN spurs investigation

Prompted by Cable News Network reports on cancerous fish in lakes and rivers around the country, John B. Breaux (D-La.), chairman of the House Subcommittee of Fisheries, Wildlife Conservation and the Environment, has called for a hearing in September to find out what's causing the cancer and potential health hazard and what, if anything, can be done.

CNN's Detroit Bureau Chief Robert Vito broke the story last May, reporting that Torch Lake, on Michigan's upper peninsula, had the highest incidence of fish malignancies ever recorded anywhere in the world. In later stories, CNN reported that the Black River near Cleveland; the Buffalo River near Buffalo; the Hudson River, north of New York, and the Duwanish River, near Seattle, were also infested with cancerous fish.

The life cycle moves so fast.

Today's minor symptoms may be tomorrow's major health problems.

The greatest obstacle to attaining better health for America is that human characteristic of putting off until tomorrow what needs to be done today.

America's health authorities are concerned because advances in science and better methods can't be given a chance to work if people do not cooperate. To really prevent disease and disablement, we need more interest and awareness in the requisites of health maintenance.

Help us to help your audience to better health. Help us to catch health problems in time to remedy them. Audition these spots; program them on your station; and, take heed yourself.

Eighty years ago, getting the latest news sometimes demanded a little patience.

The local newspaper. Whether it was a weekly or a daily, it was the world's primary source of news not too long ago. Virtually the only source to most people. So if it took a while to get it written and printed, well...

And if it took a while to get it to your neighborhood, well...

And if the paperboy dawdled to admire the newest horseless carriage, well...

Patience was a necessity in those days. Like it or not. But today television communicates instantly, using technology and facilities that are continually being improved.

Case in point? Teletext. The display of text and graphics on a television screen that lets a subscriber with a keypad find exactly what he's looking for, exactly when he wants it. The latest news. The latest sports. The weather. Special features like business reports, traffic reports, theater tickets, airline schedules, the stock market results, book reviews, astrological information and many other subjects.

It's available now from some cable television companies, and we're experimenting with new uses of it in our cable operations.

Moving with the technology of the times is another way communications companies like Storer can do their jobs more efficiently every day. Without stretching your patience.
Today, Teletext delivers it on demand. Instantly. 24 hours a day.

Concern over clutter. Voicing opposition to what it calls "clutter" on television, American Association of Advertising Agencies board said it recognizes and supports freedom of advertisers to use TV to sell their products, but strongly opposes all factors increasing clutter. Leonard S. Matthews, president of association, said board is "very concerned" about two clutter-contributing trends: recent statements by CBS and NBC that advertisers will be permitted to split 30-second announcements in two unrelated product messages, and earlier statement by networks that total commercial time would be increased. He noted both these factors contribute to increased number of consecutive commercials in each commercial break. Board also said trend toward increased clutter is disservice to viewers and, in long run, interests of viewers and advertisers are identical.

Lorimar-K&É merger. Lorimar Productions Inc. has signed agreement to acquire Kenyon & Eckhardt, New York, in transaction valued at about $20 million in cash plus additional amounts based upon fulfillment of future and unspecified conditions. Companies reached tentative agreement last March (BROADCASTING, March 28) and transaction will close on or about Aug. 15, assuming K&É shareholder approval. Lorimar had first-half revenue ended last Jan. 31 of $114.8 million, up from $85.7 million in previous first half. K&É had worldwide billings of $436 million last year and U.S. broadcast billings of $186 million.

Katz's radio analysis. Katz Radio reports that in second quarter of 1983, 25-54 demographic was in first place, representing 38% of all requests, five percentage points over second quarter 1982. In second place was 18-34 demo with 14% of requests, up sharply from 9% in comparable period of 1982. Katz study also showed that among top three dayparts, Monday to Friday 6 a.m. to 7 p.m. continued to be most requested segment, included in 26% of total presentations. Full rotation packages followed at 21% and Monday through Friday 6 a.m. to 7 p.m. plus weekends in third with 20%. Study also revealed that 82% of requests were for 60-second announcements and average number of weeks per campaign was five (four weeks when 52-week advertisers were excluded).

It takes a very tough tape to withstand edit after edit through today's VTR equipment and still deliver a crisp, clean playback image.

And tough is exactly what new Scotch® 480 one-inch video tape is.

A special coating formulation on Scotch 480 means you no longer have to worry about problems like stiction.

In fact, during computer editing, 3M lab tests have shown 480 is capable of delivering over 1,000 edits from the same preroll point, with no significant reduction in playback quality.
And in today's tough video production environment, that kind of durability can mean a lot.

Scotch 480 is further proof of why 3M is the leader in professional use video tape. And why we sell more one-inch tape for professional use than all other manufacturers put together.

Takes exception

EDITOR: I was truly astonished by your editorial endorsement of KTTL's First Amendment Rights ("If the truth were known," Aug. 1). Do you realize what the KTTL case is all about? This station is not only (as you put it) "broadcasting attacks on Jews, blacks and others," it is urging listeners to take up arms and kill them. It systematically advocates a program of fascism and terrorism. What reading of the First Amendment requires the FBI to reward such "speech" with free use of one of Dodge City's four radio licenses?

KTTL proves the value of competing applications. Since the industry appears unwilling to cleanse its own ranks of its KTTL's, thank God competing applicants still have an opportunity to try.—Pilaria Marshall, chairman, National Black Media Coalition, Washington.

Polling problems

EDITOR: The lead editorial, "Wrong Target," in Broadcasting's July 25 issue seems to miss—as did the network news executives who testified before two House subcommittees last week—that the underlying concern in Congress is exit polling. The concern is that the use of exit polls to project elections is a relatively new news phenomenon, which raises electoral problems that defy simple legislative solutions, despite the efforts of the networks to suggest otherwise.

Exit polling has been used by the networks for some time to describe voting patterns—to analyze which kinds of people voted for which kinds of candidates and why. Used in that way, exit polls have contributed greatly to our understanding of the American electorate.

What was new in 1980 was the use of exit polls by one network to actually project the results of the presidential election. By 1982, all three networks were projecting election results based on exit polls. The problem that is raised for the voting public and for the Congress is that poll closing times are no longer relevant. With partial returns, sample precincts or any of the other traditional ways to project election results, the networks could not get the information they needed until at least some polls were closed. With exit polls, however, networks can project elections well before any polls have closed anywhere.

Now, on the one hand, the media are urging radical changes in the election process, like 24-hour voting and uniform poll closing times. (In congressional hearings last year, state and local election officials outlined the enormous difficulty, disruption and expense of shifting to that kind of system.) And on the other hand, the networks cannot guarantee either that they will follow their present policy more rigidly, or that they—or some competitor—will not in the future follow a different policy, and simply project election results regardless of the poll closing time.

In short, we could easily find ourselves in the situation of having caused great dislocation and expense by changing traditional polling hours, only to find competitive factors forcing the media to use exit polls to project results even earlier—before polls are closed—and thereby to short-circuit that legislative solution completely. The Broadcasting article that was in the very same issue as the editorial explained this situation quite clearly.

What the networks and the Broadcasting editorial dismiss, while deploving some potential Congressional solutions as First Amendment violations, is that uniform poll closing times, to be successful, would be dependent on voluntary restraint by the news media. Yet, if the media were serious about a voluntary solution to the problem, they could implement one now.

At the same time, many in Congress recognize that Cable News Network (which projected the 1982 [suburban] race in California before the polls had closed), direct broadcast satellites and other technologies will expand news sources, and that competition to be first will continue to increase the pressure to use exit polls to project elections prior to any poll closings.

It is difficult to believe this would not have a profound effect on citizens' attitudes toward their votes and toward the entire electoral process, which is fundamental to our system of government. It seems neither premature nor irresponsible for Congress to begin raising these questions now, and exploring workable solutions—which, unfortunately, do not include 24-hour voting, or uniform poll closing hours, or any of the other ideas the networks have so far indicated they might support.—Al Swit, member of Congress (D.Wash.).

Cuban correction

EDITOR: Frederic Hirsch's Aug. 1 "Open Mike" questioning the wisdom of compensating broadcasters for lost revenues resulting from Cuban retaliation to Radio Marti is based on a faulty premise. Mr. Hirsch questions whether advertisers pay for spots during evening hours to reach "customers from 500-1,000 miles away."

This question implies that only skywave service would be affected by Cuban retaliation. That is not the case. For example, last August, Castro caused severe interference during four nighttime hours on a number of U.S. frequencies, including the 1040 kHz frequency of WHO Des Moines, Iowa. Interference to WHO's signal was not limited to 500-1,000 miles from Des Moines. WHO received numerous complaints of interference from residents within the city limits. Similarly, WSUN Tampa-St. Petersburg has recently experienced such an increase in Cuban interference during both day and nighttime hours that it has requested an STA. WSUN's primary service area is being affected. Many other stations in Florida suffer similar levels of interference. And the problem will worsen and spread with the passage of Radio Marti in the form proposed by the administration.—Kenneth D. Salomonow, Dow, Lohnes & Albertson, Washington.
The magic of jingles and the audio image

Advertising can be magical. It has the power to alter our perception and our thinking, stimulating desire and changing our lives—unobtrusively, unconsciously, and almost insidiously.

Prime among the magical advertising tools, in terms of tested effectiveness, is the jingle: the clever little tune and arresting lyric that compel us to buy everything from acne cream to cars.

The first jingles were the cries of street vendors, consisting of simple rhymes listing produce and products. Their reasoning for using the rhymes in this fashion was simple. By offering their wares in a sing-song fashion, they made their product line more memorable. To prove this, on a more personal level, think back to your own early years. Chances are excellent that you learned the letters of the alphabet with a song, a song you can probably still recite to this day. It was only natural that 20th-century advertisers would latch on to this time-proved technique.

You can talk to a consumer from now until eternity and get no results. It is only when you touch some responsive chord that you have the power to influence buying decisions. Music enables you to emotionalize your product and its benefits: your entire selling proposition. Through music, you are selling from the heart, to the heart.

Despite the evidence of jingles' effectiveness, they are not without their critics. Chuck Blore has been quoted as saying, "If you have nothing to say, sing it." And in a rather sweeping condemnation of audio commercials in general, several creative types gathered together to issue the following axiom: "You can't pin a commercial to the wall." This, of course, refers to the long-term, or residual effect of advertising.

Time for a demonstration. Complete the following: "Winston tastes good like..."

Could you complete it? If you did, you're living proof of the memorability of jingles. Why? Because except for an occasional novelty appearance on some nostalgia program, no one has heard the Winston cigarette jingle from which that phrase came in more than 10 years. OK, now what about Winston's current slogan? If you're like 95% of the people we've asked, you don't have the slightest idea what it is. ("Winston, America's Best.") So much for the memorability of jingles.

But besides the memorability factor, music, in the form of jingles, has many other attributes to recommend it. According to research cited by Al Ries and Jack Trout, music as sound reaches the brain faster than visuals. Sound arrives in 140 milliseconds, with visuals lagging behind at 180 milliseconds, a 40-millisecond difference. Also, sound impressions last longer, thus having a greater chance for retention. Sound fades in four to five seconds, while visuals are gone in a second or less.

The process of developing a musical image, or jingle, for an advertiser or broadcaster usually follows a similar course. A detailed consultation with the client takes place initially to establish the primary goals and objectives. This process also includes developing a profile of the client's potential customer from the information given, which in turn helps to dictate the musical style, delivery and lyrics best suited to strike the responsive chord.

The depth to which this profile is taken has grown measurably in the past decade. Once the development of a musical theme or concept was almost entirely dependent on the character of the product or service to be advertised. But recently a shift in emphasis has altered the positioning and presentation, of such things.

For example, if a client's target audience is composed of conservative, middle-aged, white-collar workers, a fully orchestrated, multivoice jingle would seem most likely to relate to this audience's self-image, whereas a jingle for a younger, more liberal-minded crowd would most likely imitate current popular music styles to achieve the greatest success.

Music, more than any other single element in the advertising arsenal, enables the advertiser to tailor a message to the potential audience's perception of reality, and this is crucial in the decision-making process. Music's unmatched ability to conform with both the real and imagined profiles of an audience has made jingles the choice of more advertisers for commercial effectiveness.

Still, jingles aren't cure-alls. Like any advertising tool, they must be designed for the purpose at hand. As the old saying goes: "If all you have is a hammer, you tend to see every problem as a nail." Instead, you must learn to incorporate the salient points of your advertising strategy into the creation of a musical image.

Success in this area requires incorporating tangible, or even intangible benefits into the development of the jingle, a skillful blending of purpose and psychographics to achieve the goal. This is an area in which music excels, for while the lyrics can extoll the virtues of a product or service, the music itself can project anything from a feeling of confidence, to excitement or exhilaration. You are making two impressions during the same time it normally would take you to make one. In this manner, music also reinforces a product's identity. There's hardly anyone over 20 years old who wouldn't immediately identify the McDonald's jingle, even without the lyrics. The music has become so identified with the product that even without mention of the name, the message is still clear.

We've used this particular aspect, musical identification, with great success for broadcasters around the world. Simple, melodic repetition of a station's call letters, presented in a musical style typifying the station's programming, has proved to be the key element in a vast majority of successful station promotions.

For years, album rock radio stations resisted the use of such identifying jingles, prevalent thought being that such musical identification would be a "turn-off" to their audiences. Research conducted by Doubleday Broadcasting's album rock consultant, Bobby Hattrick, indicated the audiences would accept album rock jingles, but only if their presentation matched the sound of the station's programming.

So it is with any jingle, for any product. Both music and lyrics must reflect the character of the product or service advertised. Music must follow the same guidelines, have the same approach and goal, as any other creative element. When it does, you have forged a powerful, magical tool capable of achieving great success. To paraphrase William Congreve: Music hath charms to soothe the savage breast, and sell a lot of soft drinks.

Worked up over productivity

In response to the growing local concern over the decline in American productivity and to support the National Association of Broadcasters' "Let's get together, America!" campaign, WJFM Radio in Grand Rapids developed a special ten-part series.

Hosted by the station's news and public affairs director, the series featured discussions with government and union leaders, economics experts and executives from major corporations. As a follow-up, WJFM also aired an exclusive interview with the U.S. Secretary of Labor. Among the responses to this ambitious local effort were several requests from companies for dubs to play for their employees.

Working to improve American productivity by helping listeners understand the problem is all part of the Fetzer tradition of total community involvement.
Networks win financial interest, syndication battle

FCC, in 'tentative' decision, wants to remove all financial interest restraints; allow domestic syndication of material not shown on network, overseas sales of any of its entertainment programing; commission solicits comments

Although all of the major television networks apparently weren't celebrating—at least in public—last week, they may secretly have been. For in a "tentative" decision, the FCC has proposed to abolish its financial interest rule, which prohibits the television networks from acquiring commercial interests in independently produced programing. And it also proposed to gut much of its rule that put the networks out of the syndication business.

Parties are being offered at least one more opportunity to change the commission's mind. No final decision will be issued until after the receipt of one round of comments, which will be due 30 days after the text of the commission's decision is published in the Federal Register. According to FCC officials, the hope is that final action will be taken this year.

Under the FCC's action, which sends a somewhat ambiguous signal (Chairman Mark Fowler and Commissioner Mimi Dawson gave the tentative decision their full approval while Commissioner James Quello concurred in part and dissented in part and Commissioner Henry Rivera dissented in part), the three major television networks—ABC, CBS and NBC—would be permitted to negotiate for as much financial interest in independently produced programing as they want; they also would be able to negotiate for syndication rights.

The decision would prohibit networks from engaging in their own syndication of entertainment series that had been given network exhibition in prime time (7-11 p.m.). Made-for-TV and theatrical movies would not be included in the prohibition. Network domestic syndication of all other kinds of programing would be permitted. There would be no restrictions on network syndication of programing overseas. In addition, the decision has proposed to "sunset" whatever remains of those rules, abolishing them altogether on Aug. 4, 1990, unless the FCC determines that some "public interest" reason requires retention.

In permitting the networks to distribute first-run syndication programing, the decision also would permit the networks to supply programing for prime time access, according to William Johnson, deputy chief of the FCC's Mass Media Bureau. "It would have to be fresh programing," Johnson said. "They [the networks] would be one more competitor, and they wouldn't be able to have any advantage," he said.

In its decision, the commission said the financial interest rule had apparently failed to do what it was supposed to do—increase program diversity and competition in program supply and distribution markets. As a result, that rule is not necessary, according to the FCC.

The commission, however, said that if it completely eliminated the syndication rule, there would be a "potential" for the networks to warehouse, or withhold prime time entertainment programing from syndication, and that could be used to place independent stations at a disadvantage. That potential, the FCC said, warranted retaining some sort of regulatory control over network participation in syndication.

The limited syndication rules it proposed to retain, which were modeled on those recommended by the Department of Justice in its reply comments in the proceeding (BROADCASTING, May 2), are aimed at preventing warehousing. Under the tentative decision, the networks—through unrestricted financial interests in that prime time entertainment programing—would be able to participate in syndication profits, but would be prohibited from retaining "active" interests in that programing.

To accomplish that, the FCC proposed to replace its current syndication prohibition with a rule that would require the networks to sell their syndication rights in prime time entertainment series to an independent syndicator within six months of the time the series has ended its network run. If a series runs beyond five years on a network schedule, the network will have to sell all of its syndication rights in that program to an independent syndicator at the end of the fifth year of network run.

The FCC also proposed that the networks be required to file a notice at the FCC within 30 days of a sale or transfer of such a program; the networks also would be required to certify that they hadn't imposed any conditions—such as restrictions on when those programs may be broadcast or by whom—on the syndicator.

At the meeting, Johnson, who presented the item for the Mass Media Bureau, said the sunset provision had been included "so the FCC doesn't have to have this [the modified rule] on the books forever."

Quello said he was in favor of "some sort of compromise," but he objected to the commission's decision to cast its action as a "tentative decision"—which is about as strong an action as it can take without actually adopting an order. Quello, who stressed that his major concern was that the independent stations have access to off-network programing, said, however, that he supported the sunset provision. "I think it will be a different world out there by that time," the commissioner said.

Rivera said he thought all of the tentative decision, except the sunset provision, was "supportable" by the record. The sunset provision, at which he aimed his partial dissent, was based on "pure speculation" on what the market will look like in 1990, he said.

Commissioner Mimi Dawson said she
The chairman wins a big one

Chairman Mark Fowler is the first to admit that last week's FCC action on financial interest and syndication is not yet a fait accompli. He'll only go as far as to say: "It's progress in narrowing the focus" of a complex issue. Nevertheless, for the person most identified with wanting to change the status quo on that subject in the first place, he had good reason to be pleased.

Not that the result was all he would have had it be. Indeed, when Fowler first put the item on the FCC's agenda the idea was for full repeal of both the financial interest and the syndication rules. Moreover, the conventional wisdom was that he had the votes to accomplish that end.

Between then and now, however, events and individuals conspired to endanger his achieving any action at all. The first was Congress's decision to reduce the size of the FCC from seven to five members, with one of the endangered members being Stephen Sharp, counted as a certain Fowler marketplace. Then came the massive campaign mounted by the Committee for Prudent Deregulation and others to persuade the FCC—and the Congress—away from repeal. And then developed a strong sentiment for "compromise," led initially by Commissioner James Quello and then picked up by Commissioner Mimi Dawson. By the spring of 1983 long faces were the uniform of the day for network lobbyists being held responsible for the success of repeal.

But all that changed in recent weeks. A four-person FCC turned out to be more amenable to the chairman's will than had a larger body. "Compromise," which had been a term used to signify victory for the producers, began to be used to describe an end result favorable to the networks. By last Thursday the tide had been turned back almost to square one. "The Fowler Compromise," as its detractors were calling it last week, had restored to the contest almost all the marketplace merits the chairman has championed since his arrival at the FCC.

He was still talking that doctrine last Thursday afternoon, when he met with Broadcasting editors. "I think we're showing in our own way that the American entrepreneurial spirit and the sense of adventure of our people are not dead. Rather, they've been subjugated by decades of heavy-handed and in some cases mindless government regulation. It seems to me that the more we get out of the way the better it gets."

Coming as it did on the last meeting day before the commission's annual August break, the action on financial interest et al served as almost a dividing line for the FCC's year. Chairman Fowler has ambitious plans for the second half, too. Among them: the extension of pre-sunrise and post-sunset hours for daytimers; amending the attribution rules that govern the amounts of interest that may be owned by investment-type entities without affecting the multiple ownership limits; repeal or amendment of the 7-7-7 rule that limits ownership to that many stations in each broadcast category (AM, FM and TV). And "more underbrush," Fowler underscores, referring to re-examination of a profusion of minor rules and regulations he feels are outdated or unnecessary, among them the fraudulent billing rules that he says have to do with "micromanaging business operations when there may be more local remedies or better remedies that may be used." To that list should be added the character inquiry which will determine the scope of what the FCC looks at when it examines a licensee's character qualifications, and the 100-mile rule that restricts the closeness of co-owned stations.

Fowler remains committed to what he calls the "print model" of broadcast regulation—to make the medium as free as the press in its relation to governmental authorities—and feels the commission's actions during his administration have gone a long way toward that goal. He's determined to stay the course.

On a more personal note, the chairman last week was taking great satisfaction in the fact that "we don't have a gloomy FCC. We have sunshine on the eight floor here, as I was telling Mimi just today. There is no sense of pall here, or sinister conspiracies going on, or this person knifing that person. We have a happy atmosphere, and I want to keep that. We all do."
than repeal in sheep's clothing."

Mel Blumenthal, executive vice president of MTM Enterprises, was quoted by CPD as saying that granting the networks any financial interest would permit them to become "the" dominant partner in the creative process. "Without the promise of downstream profits, we will lose the incentive to stretch creativity, to do innovative programs like Hill Street Blues and St. Elsewhere," Blumenthal said. "Under the Fowler compromise, we will have no bargaining power. They will hold all the cards. The American viewer will be held hostage as well, as the networks exercise increased power over what we see on television."

Reached in person, Blumenthal added that the "only reason the networks wanted repeal" was that "network audiences now have the opportunity to watch on independent television off-network product. That is what's driving them crazy."

Blumenthal also speculated that Reagan was personally concerned. "Obviously, he's in a delicate position because his appointee is running crazy with his position. Reagan, from what I hear and read, is not supportive of that."

Les Rich, president of Lorimar Productions, said it was "common knowledge" that Reagan feels the rules should not be repealed. "It's going to be a long time before this [the FCC's tentative decision] is put into effect," Rich said. "It's going to go through Congress, and it may go through the courts. But nobody is going to give up this easily."

"I just don't understand how the FCC can argue for complete deregulation and a hands-off policy after the government created this three-network oligopoly," Rich said. "This is ridiculous. What has happened since the Justice Department consent decree was signed [by the networks] three years ago? I've been in this business most of my life and I don't see anything that's happened to warrant such a revision of the rules," he said.

"The producers have very little bargaining leverage with the networks now. If the networks are to be allowed 100% of the profits and control over their networks' product, the networks will just say to us very clearly that to be on the air the producers and the talent must give them 100% of the profit and complete creative control of the show or that show will not exist."

Alan Horn, president of Embassy Communications, said he shared Rich's fears that the networks are going to make ownership and at least some syndication participation a condition of doing business if the rules are modified as proposed. "We believe the best measure of what the networks will do with the relaxation of these rules is what they've done in the past, which is to get as much as they can," he added.

Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, said that if the public understood what was going on, they would "storm" the FCC "because this will be the worst disaster for the public interest in the 20 years I've been in this town."

What the "Fowler rule" essentially would do, he says, is give the networks "total, complete, fatal domination of the TV industry to the ultimate injury of the public."

Although some have claimed that the dispute over the rules is merely an argument over which players in the industry make more money, that characterization is completely wrong, according to Valenti. "It's the networks versus competition," he said. "The Fowler rule is designed to do one thing—turn the television industry over to the three networks," he said.

Fritz Attaway, MPAA vice president and counsel, said that group would first try to convince two commissioners that their proposal is not a "realistic" regulatory scheme. "Failing that, hopefully we can convince Congress," he said.

Herman Land, president of the Association of Independent Television Stations, said he didn't want to comment until he had had an opportunity to read the full text of the decision.

Peter Allport, president of the Association of National Advertisers, said his organization will object to the commission's proposal to delete the financial interest rule. That deletion, he said, would result in increases in the prices of television programing and the cost of advertising.

Representative Timothy Wirth (D-Colo.), chairman of the House Telecommunications Subcommittee, was sharply critical of the commission's action. "The financial interest and syndication rules were adopted by the FCC to counter the overwhelming dominance of the video programing marketplace by the networks so that a broader range of creativity and diversity in programing would be encouraged," Wirth said. "It is clear that, despite the growing potential of the new technologies, network dominance still prevails. Therefore the motivation for the FCC's proposed decision makes no sense."

The commission should be finding ways to stimulate competition and a diversity of programing, not stifling it," Wirth said.

Representative Henry Waxman (D-Calif.), whose bill, H.R. 2250, would prohibit the FCC from repealing the rules for five years, said he thought the commission's action would put pressure on Congress to move quickly on his bill. "It's a capitalization to the networks' economic interest at the sake of the public's interest," he said.

Wall Street appeared to think the decision was all for the good. "The networks got about three-quarters of what they sought," said John Reidy, vice president and media analyst at Drexel, Burnham, Lambert. Reidy didn't think independent stations will suffer, since the networks still won't have control over syndication of prime time series. However, he also thinks that Congress will still involved. "Hollywood has done an incredible job of recalling to many congressmen how generous it has been in the past," he emphasized.

Reidy, moreover, pointed out that there was a limit to the amount of programing the networks would be able to invest in anyway. Given that it costs an average of $800,000 to produce a one-hour prime time program—and assuming that the networks took a 25% interest ($200,000) per episode for 26 episodes—they would have to come up with $5 million per show for a season, he noted. "They can't do that with very many shows," he said.

Richard McDonald, an analyst with First Boston Corp., said the decision was the "single most important event for commercial

Behind the lines. The FCC's "tentative decision" in its proceeding on the financial interest and syndication rules isn't being read as being cast in stone—at least not by Commissioner James Quello, who started the ball rolling on searching for a "compromise" alternative to outright repeal early in the going.

Quello's own proposal, officially unveiled during oral presentations last March (Broadcasting, March 21), wouldn't have given the networks nearly as much ground as the commission now has proposed. And in a separate statement issued last week, Quello made clear that he isn't sold on the proposed "compromise" solution that has tentatively been adopted.

"I wish to make it immediately clear that that the commission's action in this docket does not reflect a decision on my part, tentative or otherwise, that the commission should adopt this particular proposal," he said. "Therefore, I dissent to the characterization of this document as a tentative decision. Nevertheless, I fully concur in seeking public comment on this specific proposal.

"I would like to note that in reviewing the comments I shall particularly look for guidance in determining whether a narrow rule such as the one proposed here would adequately ensure that independent television stations continue to have unencumbered access to off-network syndicated programing. Such programing is a staple source of revenue for independent stations, and as such it is an important part of their ability to provide the public with a diversity of viewpoints through their news and public affairs programing."

"As I made explicit when the commission heard oral presentations on this subject, I support the concept of a compromise where the networks are not unduly restricted from participation in any market so long as the commission continues to protect the valid interests of the independent stations. Putting this proposal out for comment will, in my view, help the commission focus on whether a narrow approach such as is presented here can meet that goal. My support of this action should not be interpreted as suggesting that my further consideration of these matters will be limited to the boundaries of this proposal."

An FCC source, moreover, noted that Quello has taken a hand in engineering more than one compromise in this proceeding. Chairman Mark Fowler, for example, is said to have been of the opinion that there was enough of a record in the proceeding to put out a report and order on the spot, and "intense discussions" were held over whether more comments were needed. Quello and Commissioner Henry Rivera, the source said, were "adamant" that comments be allowed.
television in the last 10 years—terrible." Goldman Sachs's Ellen Gibbs said the decision was a "positive" development. It's "somewhat less than [the networks] hoped for but lots more than they have now."

Joseph Fuchs, first vice president of research at Kidder, Peabody, said, although the networks had gotten most of what they were after, they wouldn't necessarily become huge guns in the business. The networks are more interested in "being able to sit down with a producer" to try to control production costs, he said. "It's a bargaining chip; the playing fields are more level now."

Even if the FCC follows through and does adopt the plan it has tentatively proposed, the networks will still have to have their Justice Department consent decrees—which also prohibit them from gaining financial interests and from participating in syndication—modified to get into those ends of the business. But that isn't expected to be a difficult task. Justice, which already has held discussions with parties involved in the proceeding, has offered the opinion in comments at the FCC that the rules should be abolished (except for the narrow restriction on participation in the syndication market). One observer said he thought Justice has been waiting for the FCC to move. If the FCC does adopt its plan, Justice would then have a "rationale" to bring to the court, which would have to approve a modification of the consent decrees, for why Justice had changed its mind about the need for the restrictions, he said.

Congress goes nowhere with financial interest

House Telcosubcom fails to markup H.R. 2250 as network backers and other opponents successfully stall; Waxman, however, is confident bill will emerge in September

On Capitol Hill last week, Congress could not muster a decision on the FCC's domestic syndication and financial interest rules. Members of the House Telecommunications Subcommittee attempted to mark up a bill (H.R. 2250) that would have barred the FCC from changing the rules for five years. Their efforts, however, were thwarted by the three commercial networks and by other subcommittee members who opposed "rushing" the bill through.

Chief backers of the bill, Subcommittee Chairman Tim Wirth (D-Colo.) and the measure's author, Henry Waxman (D-Calif.), had the numbers on their side (10 of the subcommittee's 14 members are co-sponsors), but time ran out. Subcommittee members had only one hour to mark up the measure before being summoned to the House floor. Under the House's five-minute rule, committees are barred from meeting, without unanimous consent of the House, when the members are on the floor. Due to the networks' successful lobbying campaign, numerous congressmen were reportedly poised to raise objections if the subcommittee asked permission to meet. It's a standard tactic used to stall committee action, one Washington lobbyist said. "The networks have done a good job of tying things up for the foreseeable future," the lobbyist added. (The markup was held just before the August recess which limited the bill's proponents further.)

Despite the delay, the bill's co-sponsors remained optimistic and are prepared to report the bill out in September. Waxman, an aide said, was pleased because "we saw nobody voting for the network." The chief complaint, the aide stated, centered on procedural problems.

Matthew Rinaldo (R-N.J.), ranking minority member on the subcommittee, indicated he might be leaning toward the bill, but insisted on more time and at least another hearing before casting a vote. "I think it is unfair regardless of where you stand to hold a markup on this type of issue after three hours of hearings," he said. Rinaldo urged the subcommittee to wait until the FCC issues a decision and then to study it. "Let's do it the right way, not the wrong way," Rinaldo said.

Rinaldo proposed postponing consideration of the measure until after Sept. 20 which would allow the subcommittee to hold another hearing. During that hearing, he stressed, the administration's view could be presented. Rinaldo complained that the hearing record was incomplete without the administration's views.

The FCC's tentative decision may still be struck down. Waxman plans to offer an amendment that would declare any action by the FCC that takes place between Aug. 1 and prior to enactment null and void if it is inconsistent with H.R. 2250. His amendment also clearly exempts smaller television networks such as Metromedia and the Spanish International Network from being lumped with the three leading networks. "The first section of this act shall not limit the authority of the FCC to modify the provisions or applicability of any rule referred to in subsection (a) of such section with respect to any network which has fewer than 150 television licensees affiliated with such network and such licensees not to be more than 25 hours per week of programming from the interconnected program service offered by such network," the amendment said.

Other amendments were offered during the markup in an attempt to postpone the subcommittee's action. Representative James Brophy (R-N.C.), ranking minority member on the Energy and Commerce Committee and ex-officio member of the subcommittee, offered an amendment that would permit the FCC to act but would give the House and Senate power to veto any FCC decision by a two-thirds vote of both houses and with White House approval. Both those proposals were shot down by a 10-5 vote.

Representative Tom Tauke (R-Iowa) also expressed strong reservations about reporting the bill out. Tauke's amendment would provide for a review of the FCC's rules by both the subcommittee and the Senate Commerce Committee to be completed in Dec. and would prevent FCC action from going into effect until March 1, 1984. His proposal never came to a vote.

Waxman and Wirth, joined by Representative Carlos Moorhead (R-Calif.), felt Congress should act. Wirth called his colleagues amendments a dilatory tactic. Representative Al Swift (D-Wash.) vehemently disagreed. He claimed sincere procedural problems with the markup. If delay were all that opponents of fast action wanted, said Swift, they would have simply not shown up.

During a hearing held on the rules earlier last week, the same division among members surfaced.

Rinaldo raised similar objections and complained about the subcommittee's failure to let Senator Pete Wilson (R-Calif.), FCC chairman, testify. Subcommittee staff members noted that Wilson's request was rejected because the witness schedule had already been finalized. House sources, however, said Wilson's request was denied because Waxman reportedly didn't want the senator's appearance to detract from his bill.

Swift said he was troubled by the "quick action" and pointed out that the subcommittee had only a "hearing and a half" on the issue. The congressman claimed hasty action on the bill was inconsistent with the subcommittee's basic policy to craft consensus legislation and conduct a thorough hearing process.

Waxman and Wirth, however, didn't agree. Waxman insisted the issue was too important to let a regulatory agency decide it. Wirth was equally resistant to the delay of the markup. The chairman said that "not the FCC, not Mark Fowler, not the networks, not the NAB, is going to make telecom-
Two leading independent producers—Norman Lear of Embassy Productions/Tandem Communications and Mel Blumenthal, MTM Productions— network executives and other interested parties debated whether the committee should adopt H.R. 2250.

Network executives argued for repeal of the rules and urged the subcommittee not to pass the bill. Irwin Segelstein, NBC vice chairman, argued that the commission “has accumulated a tremendous public record consisting of some 30 volumes of evidence and analyses, plus all the materials of its own staff inquiry. There is absolutely no reason now to reject all of that evidence and to disregard the substantial time and effort that have been devoted to comprehensive analyses of the industry, of the changes in the marketplace, and of public interest.”

CBS/Broadcast Group vice president for policy and planning, Roger Colloff, agreed. He pointed out that the FCC under both Democratic and Republican administrations has “begun to implement this policy of encouraging new forms of competition, while removing regulations which have hampered diversity and choice.” He said opponents of repeal abandoned their original argument and “began to tell us that the real rationale of the rules was to insure a steady flow of reruns to independent stations.”

In fact, he noted, that “witnesses for the six major Hollywood studios, television program syndicators and independent stations stated at the FCC hearings in March that the only real issue left in this whole debate was the effect of repeal on independent stations. So, the argument shifted—and narrowed substantially—away from the broad prohibitions of the rules to the very specific issue of the role of networks as syndicators of off-network prime time entertainment series.”

ABC consultant Paul Borz, of Browne, Borz & Coddington, said: “The financial interest and syndication rules have only intensified a seller’s market and have denied the real providers of risk capital their fair rewards. They can only stifle the growth and quality and diversity of network programing and to continue to concentrate power in the hands of a few producers.”

Borz also argued that there will be a diversity of programing sources due to the new technologies. “Diversity via new video distribution is here. It is not something to halt and wait five years to happen,” said Borz. Production companies, he stated, are already reaping its rewards from the new technologies.

Wade Hargrove, counsel for the ABC Television Affiliates Association, also spoke in favor of repeal. Hargrove explained that the chief concern among independent television stations was that the networks would warehouse programing, but warehousing, he said, would also alarm network affiliates if they thought it would go on. Hargrove felt it was not in the networks’ interest to warehouse.

On the other side of the issue, Lear and Blumenthal urged passage of the bill. Lear said it had been difficult to get a television network to air All in the Family. The reason for the difficulty, he said, was that the program was “too different.” He said it took three years to get the show on the air. “Since the rule came into effect, and producers have found financial strength through being able to retain syndication rights, we have been better able to negotiate with the networks over the creative questions,” said Lear. “The networks remain insistent that series appeal to a certain basic level among viewers and are very hesitant to allow deviation from this norm. Retention of off-network rights allows producers to withstand some of these pressures.”

Blumenthal repeated Lear’s concerns and stressed the importance of retaining the rules. He pointed out that the networks already have multiple exclusive options on their series, exclusivity clauses, control of spin-offs, and other controls. “The networks do not lose money on even their unsuccessful shows, while the independent production companies such as MTM bear substantial deficits on the same shows.”

Blumenthal also expressed concern about the FCC “compromise.” Permitting networks to negotiate for a financial interest would put producers at a disadvantage, he said. “Because such negotiations take place before a show is on the air, producers are powerless,” said Blumenthal. “Networks will simply extract the maximum permissible rights as the price of getting your show on the air.

“It is important that these rules continue in effect at least until 1988 in order to see if sufficient competition develops in the marketplace so that the networks will no longer have oligopolistic power over television program producers,” said Lucille Salhany, vice president for TV and cable programing at Taft Broadcasting. Salhany’s testimony was intended to reflect the concerns of independent television stations. She said that independent have become so successful they are now a threat to the networks. So, she said, “the networks want to control independents’ main source of supply, the foundation of their programing: off-network product.”

Joe Waz, special counsel for the Committee Against Network Monopoly, also spoke in favor of H.R. 2250. “It appears the FCC is willing to abdicate its obligation to regulate for today, while moving diligently to open up the marketplace of tomorrow. That is why it is so important that Congress step in to clarify its intention that the creation of new outlets should be the FCC’s first priority,” he said.

Senate defeats Marti filibuster

Opponents of bill to create AM station broadcasting to Cuba will have another chance when Congress resumes after recess

Attempts in the Senate to filibuster the Radio Marti bill (S. 602) were frustrated last week when the legislators voted 61-34 to shut off debate (50 votes are needed to impose closure or limit debate).

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker (R-Tenn.) led the effort to stop the filibuster, while Senator Lowell Weicker (R-Conn.) was the primary force behind it. Weicker and others want to make major changes in the bill that, as drafted, would authorize the creation of a new AM station to broadcast news of Cuba to that country. The Senate began debating the measure two weeks ago when Weicker threatened to filibuster (BROADCASTING, Aug. 1).

After the cloture vote, the Senate returned to other legislative business and there was no debate on the bill. The Senate is recessed until Sept. 12, and the debate is expected to resume that week.

Despite the vote to impose cloture, opponents of the measure will have another opportunity to filibuster when the legislators return because the senators must vote on a motion to proceed and even when the bill is called up it is still subject to lengthy debate. In the House, H.R. 2453, the Radio Marti bill, received unexpectedly cordial handling from the House Rules Committee last week, especially considering that the House Energy and Commerce Committee has approved an amendment to that bill restricting broadcasts to the Voice of America station operating on Marathon Key, Fla., on 1180 kHz or to a shortwave frequency (BROADCASTING, Aug. 1).

Nonetheless, while Representative Dante Fascell (D-Fla.), chairman of the House International Operations Subcommittee and sponsor of the bill, let it be known that he preferred the bill without that amendment—and Representative Claude Pepper (D-Fla.), chairman of the Rules Committee, has gone on record as being strongly in support of the bill as it was originally written—no attempt was made to thwart those seeking approval of that amendment.

After Fascell and others said they didn’t want to open up the bill on the floor to the same sort of “filibustering” tactics it was exposed to on the House floor last year, the committee agreed to limit floor debate. Under the rule approved, the House Energy and Commerce Committee and the House Foreign Affairs Committee will each have one hour to present their cases on the bill, and the rest of the House will be afforded a maximum of six hours to propose amendments, debate and vote on the bill. A spokeswoman for the Rules Committee said only that the bill would be scheduled for debate some time after Congress returns from its summer recess.

Leaders from both the Foreign Affairs and Energy and Commerce Committees appeared to agree that the amendment to restrict Radio Marti operations to VOA facilities or shortwave, which was introduced by Representative Thomas Tauke (R-Iowa), was the major issue.

And while no one seemed to know whether the other legislation would be made to kill the bill through dilatory tactics. Representative Neal Smith (D-Iowa) said he wouldn’t be surprised if “someone” introduced an amendment to limit Marti’s operation to the “far ends of the spectrum” if Tauke’s amendment wasn’t approved by the full House of Representatives.

Representative Peter Kostmayer (D-Pa.), whose own amendment to restrict the broadcasts to the VOA was narrowly defeated in the House Foreign Affairs Committee in June, left little doubt that his amendment would be offered from the floor as well.

An official for the National Association of Broadcasters said the association would support either the Kostmayer or Tauke amendments. “The Rules Committee did a fair and honest job of fashioning a rule we can work with,” he said. “They considered our position and are giving the due status to the Commerce Committee amendments. Our next effort is an all-out lobbying effort on the whole House.”

Ayes have it in Wirth hearing on comparative renewals

Minow, Ferris, Parker among those urging retention of policy to police broadcast performance; Chaseman, Lynagh disagree; KTTL case at center of it all

The FCC’s comparative renewal process should remain intact. That was the overwhelming message presented to the House Telecommunications Subcommittee by a select group of witnesses assembled for a hearing last Thursday. Two former FCC chairmen and representatives from public interest groups and the United Church of Christ all agreed that the comparative renewal process serves the public interest; they urged its retention.

Industry witnesses, however, disagreed, feeling there were other ways to assure that the public interest was met. At the same time, they appeared willing to accept some form of renewal standard, although the concept of a quantified public interest standard received a mixed reception.

The hearing was part of an overall effort by the subcommittee to create broadcast deregulation legislation. Subcommittee Chairman Tim Wirth (D-Colo.) explained that consideration of the renewal process will be a key element in the deregulation legislation.

The goal of the legislation, he said, is to “insure broadcaster responsiveness to the public, while giving greater certainty and stability to broadcast licenses.” He said a key question that must be addressed is “is how citizens in a local community can assure that broadcasters recognize and respond to that community’s needs and concerns without there being any ability to file competing applications.”

Under a quantified approach, Wirth said, a broadcast licensee would be judged on the amount of programming provided in certain categories. “The issue presented is how can we best assure that there continues to be some means to deal with those policy objectives and values that a quantified program standard, by itself, might not reach,” Wirth also stated that the subcommittee staff will start meeting during August to discuss possible deregulation legislation.

Broadcasters stated that the process should be abolished. “This conviction comes from my experience in the broadcast industry and especially my personal knowledge of the four renewal challenges filed against our Miami and Jacksonville stations in 1972—during the Nixon administration’s outspoken hostility to the Watergate Post over its reporting of Watergate,” explained Joel Chaseman, president of Post-Newsweek stations. Chaseman noted that when the Florida stations were challenged, they ranked at the top among comparable stations in such meaningful categories as total news, public affairs, local and other nontertainment programming. These stations, he claimed, “were severely drained by the comparative renewal process which lasted nearly three years, without completing even the hearing stage. It cost us a lot of money, but the drain and strain on all our people were
The legislative legacy of KTTL

Representative Tim Wirth (D-Colo.) took as his text for last week's hearing on comparative renewals the case of KTTL FM Dodge City, Kan., whose license is being challenged by a competing applicant and which is under attack by a petition to deny. The station has drawn fire for its broadcasts of attacks on Jews, blacks and others (Broadcasting, Aug. 1) by a Dodge City citizens group, Dodge City Citizens for Better Broadcasting, one of the petitioners to deny, and Community Service Broadcasting, the competing applicant.

KTTL's co-owner and general manager, Nellie Babbs, was the star of last Thursday's hearing. (The station is run by Babbs and her husband Charles, who attended the hearing but did not testify.) Babbs' testimony avoided the majority of questions raised by subcommittee members concerning a broadcaster's responsibility to the public, and focused instead on her own political beliefs — primarily reflecting the views of the anti-government Posse Comitatus — and other unrelated subjects.

"What a tangled web we weave when first we practice to deceive," Babbs said at the opening of her testimony. Describing herself as a "natural American individual," she defended her station's broadcasts by claiming protection under the First Amendment.

Babbs explained that "if you go back to the intent of the founding fathers there are only 18 things the government can do." Because the Constitution has in her view been violated, Babbs said, she only recognizes "property rights and the Bill of Rights."

Excerpts from KTTL broadcasts were aired during the hearing. "We've got a bunch of empty skulls in Washington, D.C. — they gonna get filled up or busted. One or the other very soon. You're either gonna get back to the Constitution of the United States in your government or officials are gonna hang by the neck until they're dead. Your citizens posse will hang an official who violates the law and the Constitution and take him to the most populated intersection of the township and, at noon, hang him by the neck and take the body down at dark and that will be an example to these other officials who are supposed to be your servants."

Another broadcast said: "If the Jews even fool around with us or try to harm us in any way every rabbi in L.A. will die within 24 hours. Let 'em start."

With asked Babbs whether the station was meeting its community's needs. She replied that "anyone can come and broadcast a response from the station if they choose to." But "how do attacks on blacks and Jewish groups serve community needs?" he asked. "I don't consider it an attack. No one was attacked," Babbs stated.

In addition, she argued, the broadcast was a "privileged sermon," given several times during public gatherings throughout the area. "The issue was in our demographics," she added. Babbs also pointed out that her station spent hours broadcasting that Jesus was a Jew, a circumstance she felt meant the fairness doctrine would apply to her case.

Representative Mickey Leland (D-Tex.) and others had some strong words for Babbs. "Do you feel that the garbage you broadcast is responsible?" he asked. Her reply: "It is the bedrock effort as broadcasters to explore the issue. I feel it is the ultimate issue. Do we still have a Constitution?"

Leland then asked her if there are minorities in Dodge City. Babbs replied that she didn't recognize minorities, only "natural Americans." (At several times during the hearing Babbs repeated: "Woe be unto ye lawyers.")

Representatives Mike Oxley (R-Ohio) and Edward Markey (D-Mass.) spoke out against the KTTL broadcasts, labeling them irresponsible, and Markey called for removal of the station's license. "We should take this as an example to continue the comparative renewal process," Markey said.

Representative James Scheuer (D-N.Y.) said the broadcasts represent the "grossest abuse of the public's airwaves in recent memory." He said "this is not a question of the First Amendment rights of a racist, anti-Semitic pamphleteer to use his or her own printing press — or even the right of a bigoted racist to stand up and express an opinion, no matter how dangerous and hateful it may be. This is a question of abusing the trusthip of our airwaves by a broadcaster who is supposed to serve the interests of the public. Mrs. Babbs does not own those airwaves, we the public—blacks, Jews, Catholics, Protestants, every American—own those airwaves."

Congressman Al Swift (D-Wash.) noted that the KTTL case is timely and should help "shut some light" on the subcommittee's attempts to draft deregulation legislation. Swift is a key backer of the move to draft such legislation and has introduced a measure that would eliminate the comparative renewal process and establish a quantified public interest standard broadcasters would follow; he circulated a draft measure several weeks ago to get discussions going on the legislation.

Swift noted, however, that KTTL is an extreme case and is not representative of the broadcasting community. The congressman pointed out that the public also can turn to the petition to deny process as an effective means of making broadcasters accountable.

Naomi Kaufman, counsel for the competing applicant, CSB, pinned Markey in stating the case for retaining the comparative renewal proceeding. "Legislation proposed by Representatives Tauke, Tauzin and Swift which proposes to eliminate competitive renewal applications, if passed into law, would stymie our efforts by eliminating our pending application and virtually assure the license renewal of KTTL for seven more years," she said. Replacing the proceeding with a quantification standard that mechanically evaluates a licensee's performance solely on the basis of its fulfilling certain numerical quotas of program classification, she charged, "fails to address the issues of character qualification, responsiveness to community needs and interests, as well as adherence to other FCC rules and regulations."

"Ideally and in the long term," Chaseman said, "we would prefer that there not be any quantitative standard for programming, because even one all-inclusive measure would be an intrusion by government into editorial content. Also, we recognize that setting any even more damaging."

Chaseman suggested that a television station's license should be renewed unless it is guilty of a pattern of serious wrongdoing or has failed to supply a reasonable measure of nonentertainment, nonsports programing over its license period. "Petitions to deny would be available to point out where a station has failed either of these tests or to allege the special circumstances that would justify nonrenewal, notwithstanding that both these standards had been met."

"Ideally and in the long term," Chaseman said, "we would prefer that there not be any quantitative standard for programming, because even one all-inclusive measure would be an intrusion by government into editorial content. Also, we recognize that setting any single quantitative standard would be a very delicate matter. Set too low, it will have no effect. If too high, it will interject the government too prominently into program content and will restrict First Amendment and journalistic freedoms which should be given the highest possible priority."

Jonathan Lynagh, president of Multimedia's broadcast division, also made a pitch for repeal of comparative renewals. "I am convinced, because I lived through it, that comparative renewal proceedings are a waste of broadcaster resources with no compensating value to the public interest; the public, no less than the broadcast industry, is better off without them."

"Multimedia favors a renewal standard which relies on two elements: (1) the absence of a pattern of serious violations of the Communications Act and commission rules and policies, and (2) a demonstrated responsiveness to community interests and needs. That dual standard would both satisfy the government's interest in licensee compliance with important FCC rules and policies and require licensees to demonstrate that their programming would satisfy publicly met public interests and needs." Lynagh testified.

But, he said, the company does not favor a renewal standard which seeks to quantify the public interest. "Such a standard runs too great a risk that government will impinge upon journalistic discretion and unduly influence the nation's broadcast program agenda. A quantitative standard would have the government dictate programming percentages for future broadcast operations. Licenses would be compelled to meet those percentages or run the risk of non-renewal, even though their independent judgment as journalists and programers might lead to different conclusions."

The public interest is already fully protected by existing renewal and complaint procedures. Lynagh stated, "Adequate enforcement tools already exist to implement the public interest standard in license renewal proceedings. A renewal standard should be based upon the absence of a pattern of serious violations and demonstrated responsiveness to community needs. Attempts to quantify the public interest standard by requiring fixed percentages of programming run too great a risk of intrusive interference with licensee programming discretion," he testified.

Among witnesses who urged the subcommittee to retain the comparative renewal concept was former FCC Chairman Charles Ferris of Mintz, Levin, Cohn, Ferris, Glovsky and Popeo. "I think you can keep the process. It's not perfect but it's the linchpin of the public interest standard," he stated. "KTLT, he noted, is an unfortunate but current example of the need for the comparative renewal process. Petitions to deny, Ferris added, are inadequate."

"In the last 50 years, only one radio licensee has lost his license to a challenger on purely comparative grounds. This was Simon Geller, of WWCA-FM Gloucester, Mass., in 1982. During the last 50 years no television licensees have lost their licenses on purely comparative grounds. To avoid an argument over details, I do concede that some consider the 1969 FCC decision to deny the license of WHDH-TV in Boston to have been on comparative grounds, thereby making a total of one television license lost through comparative renewal since the birth of the industry." Ferris said.

The former FCC chairman argued that the comparative renewal system offers the advantage of minimal government intrusion. "Through a comparative application, the private sector is able to monitor the private sector. The government has neither the resources nor the incentive to effectively monitor 10,000 broadcast licensees, while a competing applicant has the incentive and is willing to commit its resources to initiate what is effectively a private suit to vindicate the public interest," Ferris maintained.

Representative Tom Tauke (R-Iowa), co-author of another broadcast deregulation bill (H.R.2382), disagreed with Ferris. He claimed the former FCC official was assuming that if the comparative renewal process is repealed, broadcasters will no longer have to meet any of the FCC rules. Ferris insisted, however, that comparative renewals serve as the "measure standard."

Newton Minow, another former FCC chairman and attorney with the Chicago firm of Sidley & Austin, also testified in favor of retaining the process. (Minow's firm is representing the Dodge City Citizens for Better Broadcasting in the KTLT case, see box page 33): "I would not eliminate comparative renewals entirely, but strictly limit them to situations where there has been a prior showing that the existing licensee either seriously violated commission rules or policies, or has performed in a manner substantially inferior to that of comparably-situated licensees. Under such an approach, the vast majority of licensees-over 95%—will not face a comparative renewal hearing. But those licensees least well serving the public interest—like KTLT—will have a strong incentive to improve, or be replaced by a more responsible broadcaster," Minow said.

If Congress decides to repeal the process, it must be sure to provide an adequate substitute to insure licensee performance in the public interest, he noted. "Quantification criteria alone, as I have noted, do not accomplish that task."

Jeffrey Olson of the Citizens Communications Center, Washington, also told the subcommittee that if the comparative renewal process is removed, petitions to deny must be strengthened. "Petitions to deny are the essential safety valve in the public trust system," he said.

Rev. Everett Parker, director of the Office of Communication, United Church of Christ, claimed the KTLT case is not unique. "Other broadcasters have used their stations for anti-American, anti-semitic and racially-biased programming in Paradise, Calif., Puyallup, Wash., Philadelphia and other communities," Parker stated. Parker said he saw no need for changing the existing statutory licensing framework. He also expressed dissatisfaction with quantification of a public interest standard. "The quantification notion falsely assumes that all information programs are equally in the public interest, whereas many have little value."

Parker presented his own proposal (the details of that proposal also were contained in a letter sent to House Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman John Dingell [D-Mich.] ) includes indefinite license terms and eliminates comparative renewals. "The operations of a given percentage of stations would be reviewed randomly each year by the FCC according to a standard that emphasized public service and local programs. This standard would be defined by a base line and include:

- Programming which affords opportunity for self-expression to persons and groups in the service area.
- Programming which gives information about matters of particular interest or concern in the service area.
- Programing presented to serve the needs of non-profit and governmental organizations in the service area.

"Thinning the thicket. The FCC last week took another whack at what Chairman Mark Fowler has been calling "regulatory underbrush," eliminating 10 policies restricting programming discretion—and proposing to eliminate three more ("Closed Circuit," July 18).

"Slashed, perhaps by an unanimous vote (Commissioner Henry Rivera said he would either concur or dissent, depending upon how the official order is worded), were policies aimed at discouraging liquor advertisements in "dry" areas, placing special restrictions on broadcasts of foreign-language programs, dealing with "harassing and threatening" phone calls resulting from broadcasts, governing broadcasts of astrology information, music format service agreements, repetitious broadcasts, the presentation of off-network programs and feature films, call-in polls, "private interest" broadcasts and the use of sirens and similar sound effects.

In a notice of proposed rulemaking, the commission also asked whether it should eliminate three policies aimed at restricting broadcasts of horse racing information.

In a news release, the FCC said the policies, doctrines, informal rulings and statements that have "grown up" around major regulations over the years 'have the potential to impede the competitive functioning of the marketplace by stifling broadcasters' discretion in much the same manner in which small vines can choke a healthy tree.'"

"James A. Hudgens, an attorney with the FCC's Office of Plans and Policy, who proposed more of the same, said the 'central theme' is to 'relax on basic licensee responsibility' as much as possible."

Rivera said he didn't have a problem with the "majority" of the commission's actions, but he did object to the "ideological" rhetoric in the draft order. "Chairman Mark Fowler, however, said he was glad to see that the commission was 'pruning' some of the underbrush away. "Frankly, some of this is just dumb," Fowler said.

METROSPORTS DELIVERS SOME VERY HEALTHY NUMBERS.

Any media director can appreciate figures like these.
For starters, over 100 top-ranked college basketball games from the Big 10, Pac 10 and Big East conferences along with great independents like DePaul, Marquette and Notre Dame. Plus 11 Notre Dame and 11 UCLA football games on tape delay. And the Aloha Bowl live from Honolulu.

A terrific line-up of sports events. Now, for the first time, available in packages that reach 80% of all U.S. TV households.

That's METROSPORTS. Now exclusively represented for TV advertising sales by Tribune Entertainment Company.

It's 8.7% increase despite holdover network pacts with NFL, NCAA; total includes $15 million to USFL for TV, radio and cable coverage; USA Network cutting back its college presentations

With the major networks locked into multiyear contracts with both the National Football League and the National Collegiate Athletic Association, football rights fees remain somewhat stable for the upcoming season, rising about 8.7% to $536.6 million. At the outset of last year, those fees were expected to rise a staggering 135% to $493.7 million due largely to new network pacts with the NFL and the NCAA. As it turned out, however, last year's overall increase, although high, did not add up to 135%, due to the eight-week NFL strike. It is believed the networks paid only $200 million of the $300 million that was due under the new NFL contract last year. (Generally, the five-year NFL network pact is valued at about $2 billion.)

The largest increases for the 1983 season come from the payments by local rightsholders to NFL clubs to cover individual teams around the league. Local radio rights payments increased by 47% this year to 12.6% million, compared with the $8.5 million paid in 1982. In most, if not all cases, local radio rights holders are entitled to pro vide coverage of a team's entire 16-game regular season schedule as well as the four preseason contests played by the team. Local TV rights holders are to pay clubs a total of more than $3.8 million this year, a 40% increase over 1982 when they paid close to $2.7 million. Local television rights generally provide for the holder to broadcast up to four of a team's preseason games. Regular-season live telecasts are the exclusive domain of the three television networks.

With the four-year agreement reached by the NFL Players Association and the NFL Management Council last year, most agree that a strike is out of the question for the next several seasons. Thus, with a full season of games to be televised, the networks will pay significantly more for the NFL rights this year than last. On an average annual basis over the life of the five-year agreement as initially negotiated, the three networks would pay a total of $414.7 million per year, with CBS paying about $148 million annually, ABC, $136 million, and NBC, $130 million. However, under the terms of payment, as is usually the case, the networks will pay less than the annual average in the early years of the contract and more during the pact's later years. For example, it's understood that the three were supposed to have paid a total of $300 million for the exclusive rights to the 1982 season, although that payment was reduced by about one-third, sources confide.

This year, the combined TV network total will probably be in the $300-million range, perhaps a little more, while year three should see the networks paying close to the average annual value of $414 million. While the structure of NCAA football television coverage, in the long term, re mains in question, the status quo has been preserved for the 1983 season. Several weeks ago Supreme Court Justice Byron White granted an emergency request filed by the NCAA for a stay of a previous ruling by the 10th Circuit Court of Appeals that NCAA television contracts with CBS, ABC, and Turner Broadcasting System violated antitrust laws (BROADCASTING, July 25). The stay will remain in effect until the court decides next term whether to hear the NCAA's appeal of the 10th circuit ruling, and if so, until the high court hands down its decision. And since the court's decision to hear the case won't come until October at the earliest, well into the 1983 college football season, most observers believe the entire season will be played out under the existing NCAA television coverage plan.

As the contracts now stand, both ABC and CBS will each pay the NCAA $131.75 million for the four seasons from 1982 through 1985, or close to $33 million per year on average. TBS is entering the second year of a two-year contract with the NCAA, valued at $17.6 million.

Included in the total rights figure is more than $15 million that will be paid to the United States Football League for coverage of its second season which begins in the spring of 1984. ABC will have the exclusive over-the-air rights (and exclusive television rights to a pro off and champion ships action) for the upcoming season, for which it has agreed to pay $9 million. ESPN has the exclusive cable rights for which it will pay $5.5 million. ABC Radio will pay $625,000 for the USFL network radio rights.

On the radio side, ABC, CBS, Mutual and NBC are spending about what they did last year for the rights to college and pro games—$6 million. More than half of that figure is being paid by CBS, which is entering the last year of a four-year contract with the NFL, valued at $12.1 million, or $3.025 million per year.

Next spring may also see the birth of another professional football circuit—the Inter national Football League, which would start play with an initial 12 teams, and would compete head to head (for fans and, viewers) with the USFL. The IFL would play its games from March to July, as does the USFL. The newest league recently announced it is talking with William B. Tanner Co., the Memphis-based media buying service, about a rights deal for which the league is asking $21 million (BROADCASTING, Aug. 1).

Cable television networks will be paying about $16 million in all for the rights to professional and college football games this year. Most of that being shelled out by TBS ($8.8 million) for its NCAA games and ESPN ($5.5 million) for coverage of the USFL. Although the latter will also be providing coverage of the Canadian football and some college games as well. The USA Cable Network will also carry college games, perhaps 15 or 20 in all, but significantly fewer than it showed last year. The ESPN and USA college games will be shown on a tape-delayed basis.

Rights payments for local radio and delayed TV broadcasts for major college games will total about $10.6 million this year.

Here's how the networks plan to use what they've bought for the 1982 season:

- ABC-TV opened its fall football season July 30 with the annual AFC-NFC Hall of Fame Game, between the Pittsburgh Steelers and the New Orleans Saints, in Canton, Ohio. ABC also has two other preseason

Major sponsors include Alcoa (Creamer Inc.), Lincoln-Mercury (Young & Rubicam), Chevrolet (Campbell-Ewald), Chrysler (Kenyon & Eckhardt), Mazda (Foote, Cone & Belding), American Motors (Grey Advertising), Stroh’s beer (BBDO), Pabst (McCann-Erickson) and Mercedes (McCaffrey & McCall).

NBC-TV has four college bowl games again this season, three on Monday, Jan. 2, the Fiesta at 1:30 p.m., with 30-second spots priced at $90,000 (up from $75,000 a year ago), the Rose at 4:45 p.m., with 30’s at $235,000 (up from $212,500) and the Orange at 8 p.m., with 30’s at $185,000 (unchanged from last season because, according to NBC sources, last season’s Orange Bowl matchup, between Nebraska and Louisiana State, didn’t produce ratings to support a price increase now). The Hula Bowl is scheduled for Jan. 7 at 4-7 p.m. and its 30’s are priced at $60,000, the same price tag as a year ago when the game was in prime time.

NBC sales officials said it’s too early to talk about advertiser commitments for the bowl games.

CBS Radio Network will begin its sixth consecutive year of NFL coverage with a lineup of 37 games. Scheduled are 27 regular-season games, most of which will air on Monday nights, plus all 10 post-season contests including the AFC and NFC first-round playoffs, four divisional title games, the Super Bowl and Pro Bowl. Opening the season this year will be Dallas at Washington, Labor Day, Sept. 5, at 8:30 p.m. NYT, followed by San Francisco at Minnesota, the same time Thursday night, Sept. 8. CBS sportscasters Jack Buck and Hank Stram will handle play-by-play and color, respectively.

Sales are brisk, said Michael Ewing, vice president and general manager, CBS Radio Network. Major advertisers thus far include: Anheuser Busch; State Farm Insurance; Ford; Ford Motorcraft; General Motors (Buick); Honda; Travelodge; Union Carbide and CBS Television. The network offers advertisers either full or part sponsorship of games, according to Ewing.

CBS Radio is also airing four special football programs: Pro Football Hall of Fame

Mutual is offering its affiliates, for the first time, NFL doubleheaders for the 16-game regular season ("Riding Gain," July 11) beginning Sept. 4 with Miami at Buffalo, 12:45 p.m. NY&T and the N.Y. Jets at San Diego at 3:45 p.m. The games, which will air the same times each Sunday, are expected to be sold out with a "closing rush" by Sept. 1, according to a Mutual spokesman. Major sponsors for the NFL Sunday package thus far include: Anheuser-Busch (Budweiser), International Harvester, Haggar Slacks, Ford Motorcraft and Tru-Value Hardware Stores. Named as the play-by-play and color team for the doubleheaders are sportscaster Tony Roberts and former Los Angeles Rams coach Ray Malavasi along with sportscaster Mel Procter and former Pittsburgh Steeler linebacker Jack Ham.

Additionally, Mutual has rights for four regional networks covering the Pittsburgh Steelers, Kansas City Chiefs, Houston Oilers and Atlanta Falcons. Advertisers buying spots exclusively on a regional network basis include Gulf Oil and Goodies Headache Powder.

For its collegiate coverage, CBS Radio has added the Kickoff Classic, Aug. 29, to its 1983 schedule. This new, annual game will pit preseason favorite Nebraska against Penn State, the 1982 national champion ("Riding Gain," June 13). Completing the college football game lineup for CBS are the Sun Bowl, Dec. 24: Cotton Bowl, Jan. 2, and Senior Bowl, Jan. 14.

Mutual's college coverage will again include Notre Dame's football. Plans call for 11 Notre Dame games beginning Sept. 10 along with nine "randomly selected" major college football match-ups starting Sept. 3. And Mutual's annual lineup of college football events reads as follows: Army-Navy game, Nov. 25; Holiday Bowl, Dec. 23; Hall of Fame Classic, Dec. 28; Liberty Bowl, Dec. 29; Gator Bowl, Dec. 30; and the Sugar Bowl, Jan. 2.

ABC Radio has just ended its first year of a two-year deal for coverage of USFL football clearing it twice weekly over 200 stations for network broadcast of different games. Major advertisers included: Stroh's Beer, Delco Electronics, and Warner-Lambert (Schick).

NBC Radio's football coverage includes three college bowl games all slated to air Jan. 2: Fiesta Bowl, Rose Bowl and Orange Bowl.

For the majority of stations with rights to local games of NFL teams, the sales picture appears to be bright. And even the small handful which have reported some softness in sales up to this point, perhaps as a result of last year's strike, remained confident that they would be sold out or just about sold out by game time.

In Cincinnati, Bob Kriehoff, general sales manager of TV's Wilder (TV), said sales were running ahead of last year's pace, with major sponsors including Anheuser-Busch, Toyota dealers and Blue Cross. Harold Calvin, vice president and general manager of radio station WKRC(AM), said that two weeks ago he had only "a couple of participations" left to sell. Major sponsors for that station include Budweiser and Chevrolet.

In Cleveland, John Llewellyn, station manager at TV channel 4, said that two weeks ago he had only "a couple of participations" left to sell. Major sponsors for that station include Budweiser and Chevrolet.

Radio in Detroit, Jim Long, manager of CBS Radio, said that two weeks ago he had only "a couple of participations" left to sell. Major sponsors for that station include Budweiser and Chevrolet.

In Denver, Harold Deutsches, vice president and general manager of WNBAM(AM) Baltimore, reported that about 75% of the Colts schedule has been sold. Sponsors include Honda, People Express, Miller Brewing Co. and Maryland National Bank. Arnie Klein, vice president and general manager of WMAR-TV, said that sales for the Colts preseason games were running ahead of last year. He cited Toyota and Pabst beer as major sponsors.

At WIP(AM) Philadelphia, general sales manager of the Eagles' television package, said 80% of the Eagles schedule was sold (about the same percentage that was sold a year ago at this time) with major sponsors including TWA, Budweiser, Honda, Getty Oil, Frito Lay and MAB Paints.

About 80% of the radio time has also been sold by the New England Patriots radio station WEEAM(AM) Boston, according to Steven Knowles, the station's general sales manager. Advertisers include Anheuser-Busch, Honda, TWA and Gulf Oil and a number of local advertisers. The Patriots have a new TV originator this year—WNEV-TV Boston, replacing WBZ-TV Boston. Fred Petrosino, vice president, sales, WNEV-TV, said that sponsors of the preseason Patriots game this year include GMC Flash Jeep, Stroh's beer and Stop & Shop supermarkets.

Sales for both radio and TV coverage of the Buffalo Bills have been running ahead of those for last year, according to Larry Lo- vato, president, WKBW(AM) Buffalo, and Philip Beuth, vice president, general manager, WKBW-TV Buffalo. Radio sponsors include Chevrolet, Budweiser, People Express Airlines, M&T Bank, Bells supermarkets and Hills department stores. Television sponsors include Genesee beer, Emery Air Freight and an AMC local dealership.

A better record for the Miami Dolphins last season has attracted coverage this season by the biggest radio network (26 stations) since the team dominated the NFL in the mid-1970's. WIOD(AM) Miami national sales manager, Phil Costin, said Chevrolet, Anheuser-Busch, Chevron, Eastern Airlines and Ryder Trucks are returning as major sponsors on the network, which for the first time this year will be satellite-fed. TV coverage of Dolphin preseason games has moved to WBIS-TV this year from previous rights holder WLAV(AM) Radio. Budweiser, beer and Burger King are major game sponsors while Ford and Stroh's are sponsoring the station's one-hour pregame show.

KCMO(AM) Kansas City's Steve Shannon said that station has sold about 60% of the time available for the Chiefs and that the football schedule would be sold out by the time the season begins. Major sponsors for the station include Getty Oil, MCI, Uniroyal, Chrysler, TWA, Mercantile Bank Corp. and Frito-Lay. Pat North, general sales manager at KCTV(TV) Kansas City, reports that sales for available time during the preseason Chiefs games are "moving briskly," with about 60% of the spots sold. Sponsors, he said, include Budweiser, Ford, Getty Oil and Emery Air Freight.

Harold Deutsches, vice president and general manager of WNBAM(AM) Baltimore, reported that about 75% of the Colts schedule has been sold. Sponsors include Honda, People Express, Miller Brewing Co. and Maryland National Bank. Sales for both radio and TV coverage of the Buffalo Bills have been running ahead of those for last year, according to Larry Lovato, president, WKBW(AM) Buffalo, and Philip Beuth, vice president, general manager, WKBW-TV Buffalo. Radio sponsors include Chevrolet, Budweiser, People Express Airlines, M&T Bank, Bells supermarkets and Hills department stores. Television sponsors include Genesee beer, Emery Air Freight and an AMC local dealership.

WNEW (AM) New York, the Giants radio originator, indicated that sales “are ahead” of last year. He said spots should be sold out by the time contract negotiations start. Major adver-sors include TWA, Anheuser-Busch, Manufacturers Hanover Trust and Nabisco. WNEW has originated Giants football for the past 23 years. On television for the Giants, WPXI (TV) New York has tapped Miller beer as a sponsor for tape-delayed broadcasts of three preseason contests.

New York Jets football appears to be attracting more ad dollars this season after the team’s winning performance last year. Business for WCBS (AM) New York, according to the station’s general manager, James McQuade, is up 40% compared to a year ago. McQuade reports Nissan Motors/Datsun, Gulf Oil, Manufacturers Hanover Trust and the New York Racing Association as among the major sponsors for season coverage. On the television side, sales this season are described as “very brisk” by Charles (Bud) Meehan, the station’s vice president and general manager. Major advertisers include Miller beer, Amoco Gas, Oil and Procter & Gamble.

“Selling the world championships was easy this year,” said John Logan, sales manager at WJLA (TV) Washington, which originates the Redskins preseason games. Advertisers include Toyota, Stroh’s, Midas Muffler, Pizza Hut and AMC Jeep/Renault. The Redskins are also sold out on the radio side, where WMAL (AM) originates the games. Sponsors include Anheuser-Busch, Chevrolet, Mobil, TWA, Kodak, McDonald’s and Riggs Bank.

In Pittsburgh, Pat Gnitzer, vice president and general manager of WPXI (TV), said sales “are not in bad shape,” and that he expects 75% of availabilities to be sold with 25% left open for “last-minute” buyers. Sponsors for the preseason Steelers games include Iron City Beer and Pittsburgh National Bank. WTNJ (AM) has the radio rights and will broadcast four Steelers preseason games plus the July 30 Hall of Fame game between the Steelers and the New Orleans Saints. It will also carry the 16-game regular schedule. Sponsors include People Express, Pittsburgh National Bank, Bailey’s Juice Products and the Foodland supermarket chain.

Sports syndicators and resale carriers reported the following activity for the upcoming season:

■ Metro sports is putting together the radio networks for the Washington Redskins, Phila-adelphia Eagles, Baltimore Colts, New York Giants and San Diego Chargers. And it holds the broadcast and cable rights to the University of Maryland games, which it will put together, for the first time, two separate networks, with flagship stations in Washington (WMAL) and Baltimore (WBIM). It also produces delayed-telescast packages of Notre Dame and UCLA football, both of which will be seen on ESPN this season. The Notre Dame package also will be seen on television stations covering 60% of the U.S. It will also syndicate the Aloha Bowl (played in Honolulu, Dec. 26) to TV and radio broadcasters and ESPN.
■ Katz Sports will syndicate the first annual Kickoff Classic, the opening game of the 1983 college football season, to be played at Giants Stadium in Rutherford, N.J., on Aug. 29 between Penn State and Nebraska. Katz has cleared over 170 stations, reaching nearly 70 million. Katz will also syndicate and produce the 25th annual Liberty Bowl on Dec. 29.
■ David Halberstam, manager of sports sales, Katz Radio, estimated that spot radio sales for football coverage will remain about the same as last season. He stressed that business varies from market to market. Halberstam said the base for radio advertising of sports remains small and the mission is to attract new advertisers. For this season, he cited such newcomers as MasterCard, Special Sheild and People Express and said that Honda is investing more heavily than in the past. He noted that airlines have not been as active as in past years.
■ Mizlou Productions, New York, has put together a schedule of six bowl games this season, consisting of the Independence Bowl on Dec. 10 (8 p.m. NYT); Cotton Bowl on Dec. 17 (4 p.m. NYT); Florida Citrus Bowl (formerly Tangerine Bowl) on Dec. 22 (9 p.m. NYT); Blue Bonnet Bowl on Dec. 31 (8 p.m. NYT), and Senior Bowl on Jan. 14 (1 p.m. NYT). Mizlou will be presenting two one-hour specials this season—History of the Forward Pass during Thanksgiving period and Bowl Game Preview on Dec. 3.
■ Btr/ter Television Sales is syndicating a new one-hour sports special, The Final Cut, which will be available Sept. 1 to coincide with the start of the new professional football season. The program has cleared 40 markets and aims to clear 100 by Labor Day weekend, said Btr/ter President Terry Lynch. The special takes an in-depth look at the rookie players hoping to make it in the NFL.
■ Pro Sports Entertainment of New York will again offer two television football series as well as an expanded number of special features. Already cleared nearly 100 stations are NFL Week, a 22-week half-hour highlight program, and NFL Pro Magazine (formerly NFL Weekly Magazine), a 21-week half hour features show. Returning as major sponsors are Mazda and Coors beer. Tony Vella, vice president of station sales for Pro Sports, says the company guartees advertisers 70% coverage of television households nationwide.

Special programing packages include:
NFL’s Best Ever, a half-hour program, and NFL Pro Magazine (formerly NFL’s Weekly Magazine), a 21-week half hour features show. Returning as major sponsors are Mazda and Coors beer. Tony Vella, vice president of station sales for Pro Sports, says the company guartees advertisers 70% coverage of television households nationwide.

■ Wold Communications, Los Angeles, reported brisk business in arranging for transmissions of NFL games and said it will handle the networking for 18 clubs on radio and eight on television. The radio end covers all preseason and regular games, while TV is restricted to the preseason contests only. The radio total is about the same as last year, while television is up slightly. Wold is still in negotiations for college football and expects to receive information in a few weeks. The company, in association with Metropolis, will handle transmission of Notre Dame games, including a one-hour weekly show of tape origination and tape playback.

On the cable side, both ESPN and WTBTS (TV) Atlanta will originate about as much football as they did last year. USA Cable Network, however, is reducing the number of college games it will carry for the coming season.

ESPN’s Canadian football coverage began on July 8, and will consist of 35 games, mostly live, including the championship game. Major advertisers include Anheuser-Busch, Kodak, Bic, Quanta and United Airlines. Rates vary according to daypart, but the range is $700 per 30-second for a tape-delayed game not shown in prime time to $4,000 per 30-Second for a live prime time game in the fourth quarter (October-December). Assuming that the NCAA contracts with the networks remain in force, ESPN will carry two tape-delayed college games each weekend, including the entire Notre Dame schedule for this year and a number of UCLA games (both packages are being put together by Metropolis). ESPN also will air, on a tape-delayed basis, the Rose Bowl; seven live bowl games, including the Aloha Bowl (Metropolis), and Mizlou presentations of the Florida Citrus, Independence, California, Holiday and Blue Bonnet bowls. The network owns the rights to the Senior Bowl. Sponsors and rates for college play are similar to the network’s CFL coverage.

Next spring ESPN will carry for the second year, 34 USFL games, on Monday and Saturday nights. The rate for a 30-second spot during live USFL coverage will be the same as last year—$10,800. Sponsors include Anheuser-Busch, Mennen, Ford, GM Trucks and Mattel.

WTBS is entering the second year of a two-year contract with the NCAA, giving it the rights to 19 games. Sponsors include Chevrolet, Panasonic and A.C. Delco. For the first year, both rights have acquired famous rights to the Hall of Fame Bowl, which will air Dec. 22 at 8 p.m. In all likelihood, that bowl game will be syndicated as a Turner Network Television presentation to over-the-air broadcasters in the same manner that TBS syndicated last year’s Georgetown-Virginia college basketball game.

USA is cutting back its tape-delayed football coverage from the 55 games it had last year to 15 or 20 this year. A USA spokesman explained that while viewers have expressed some interest in college football, “it was not enough to justify all the games we were doing.” USA college football spots are priced at about $2,200 per 30 second. Sponsors include Levi Strauss, Mobil Oil, Duracell, CRC Chemicals and Cinemax.
A side-by-side comparison of network compensation

Network affiliates association gathers data on rates paid by the three TV networks

A rare side-by-side look at the TV networks' affiliation compensation rate structures, market by market, is provided in comparisons developed primarily from affiliation contracts on file with the FCC. The basic work was done by researchers for the ABC-TV Affiliates Association after most ABC affiliates indicated a willingness to participate by submitting information on their own ABC hourly rates. The results were circulated among the affiliates at their annual meeting last spring (BROADCASTING, May 16).

The idea, according to association leaders, was to let ABC stations that participated in the study know how their rates stacked up against those of NBC and CBS affiliates in their markets, or against those of affiliates in other markets. Those that thought they were being underpaid could then, if they wished, use the information in individual rate negotiations with ABC. But that, leaders emphasized, would be a question for each affiliate to decide for itself, because the association does not and cannot legally negotiate rates.

The material developed by the association's researchers was extensive, but it also contained holes—and other weaknesses, too, association leaders said. Some 20 affiliates, for example, did not submit their own network rates. For those markets, the association made no attempt to compile CBS and NBC affiliates' network rates. In many other markets, contract information for one or more stations could not be located in the FCC files. In other cases, according to association leaders, it was found and reported although it seemed likely to be out of date, and in some cases the researchers used alternative sources of information that also might be out of date.

BROADCASTING undertook to plug the holes in the association's report. Reporters searching the FCC files were able to compile information for all affiliates in virtually all of the 20 markets whose ABC affiliates did not participate in the association's study. But BROADCASTING's reporters encountered many of the problems that the association's researchers did: inability to find any contracts at all in many cases and uncertainty about the currency of others.

The result of BROADCASTING's research and highlights of the ABC association's report are combined in the chart below.

The comparisons show wide swings in the network rates in many markets. They also indicate that, on the whole in competitive markets, NBC tends to pay higher hourly rates than ABC or CBS, and that ABC tends to be the rates leader much less often than either of the others. Thus, in 134 three-network markets on which rate information is available for all three affiliates, NBC's rate is the highest in 67 markets. CBS's is highest in 40 markets and ABC's is in 25 (the figures include ties).

The differences may be offset in some cases by the fact that, according to this information, NBC generally pays its affiliates 30% of their network hourly rate for carrying network programs in the 6-11 p.m. period, while ABC and CBS generally pay 32%. (The percentages for other dayparts are generally lower.)

Some observers feel that one factor in NBC's tendency to assign higher hourly rates to its affiliates is its long tenure in third place in the three-network ratings race—that in some cases it must pay more or feel it must, to retain affiliations. On the other hand, the comparatively few instances in which ABC's is the highest rate in the market would not seem to corroborate claims that ABC's success in winning new affiliates in recent years resulted as much from aggressive compensation policies as from improved program ratings.

Many factors figure in the determination of an affiliate's network hourly rate. Theoretically, at least, it is supposed to reflect the affiliate's delivery of audiences for network programming. This may be influenced by other considerations, such as physical coverage, or a U competing with two V's; whether a station's local programming, particularly its newscasts, is above or below par for the market, and whether a station is given to frequent pre-emptions of network programs. A station's standing in its community may make it a desirable affiliate in some cases, apart from its ratings. A long-standing "good" relationship between an affiliate and its network may be taken into account. The availability of other stations in the market may strengthen a network's hand; a lack of comparable alternatives may similarly weaken it. The compensation terms in the original affiliation deal may have a carryover effect, keeping them relatively low if they started low or relatively high if they started that way. Finally, it all comes down to negotiations between network and station—and which has the stronger arguments or alternatives.

Thus while the compensation bases for all three affiliates are comparable in many markets, in many they are not. In the first market on the list, Abilene, Tex., for instance, the CBS affiliate is shown with an hourly rate of $158, while the ABC affiliate's is $550, and the NBC affiliate's $800. The CBS affiliate is a U, the other two are V's. In Columbus, S.C., as another example, the NBC affiliate...

Wometco record. Wometco Enterprises reported record net income of $13,027,000 for 24 weeks ended June 18, 10% increase over $11,887,000 for same period in 1982. Revenue was $228,457,000 (4% gain) and $220,277,000, respectively in those periods. Although it trailed both soft-drink bottling and vending arms in revenue, broadcasting was highest in divisional income with $12,712,000 before considerations for unallocated expenses and income taxes. Cable TV also was strong in divisional income with $6,025,000 for 24-week period, but subscription television had $692,000 loss in that period, substantial reversal from $819,000 profit shown in comparable 1982 period. Wometco Enterprises also released figures for 12-week period ended June 18 that showed net income of $5,365,000 on revenues of $121,614,000, exceeding $116,339,000 revenue and $6,713,000 net income during similar period in 1982.

Split and payout. Meredith Corp. stockholders have approved three-for-one stock split, to be effective next Friday (Aug. 12). Des Moines, Iowa-based publisher-broadcaster, also announced that, before sale of its KCMO(AM)-KCEZ(FM) Kansas City, Mo., to Fairbanks Broadcasting Co. for $6 million (BROADCASTING, July 4), net earnings for Meredith's fourth quarter were $6,964,000, or $2.23 per share. Sale of radio properties contributed additional $3,802,000, $1.22 per share, to earnings. Earnings in 1982's fourth quarter were $5,443,000 or $1.77 per share, on revenue of $108,590,000, virtually same as revenue of $108,471,000 in fourth quarter of fiscal 1983. For full year, Meredith had revenue of $447,755,000 and net earnings of $29,487,000 (excluding proceeds from sales of radio properties), or $9.45 per share. In preceding year, earnings were $26,924,000, or $8.57 per share, on revenue of $449,143,000.

Post's post. Post Corp., Appleton, Wis.-based group of five TV stations and three radio stations, reported earnings increased 30% to $1,631,000, or 89 cents per share, over same period year ago.

MCI split. MCI Communications Corp., Washington, announced two-for-one stock split after shareholders had approved increase of company's common shares from 200 million to 400 million. Split is payable Aug. 19 to shareholders of record July 29. MCI on July 12 had reported record revenue of $1.3 billion and record net income of $208.9 million (earnings per share 79 cents) for 12 months ended June 30, 1983, compared to $692.5 million revenue and $112.3 million net income (earnings per share $1.21) in preceding 12 months. For quarter that just ended, MCI had revenue of $363.8 million, up 96.5% from $185.1 million in same quarter last year. Net income was $54.6 million, up 49.7% from $36.5 million in quarter ended June 30, 1982.

Nielsen's numbers. A.C. Nielsen Co. reported for nine months ended May 31, 1983, sales increased 6.3% to $551,140,000 from $474,998,000 year earlier. Net earnings for same period increased 8.1% to $32,850,000, or $1.46 per common share. Company also declared quarterly cash dividend of 70 cents per share on common stock, payable Aug. 1 to shareholders of record July 13.

MGM/UA results. MGM/UA Home Entertainment Group Inc., distributor of theatricals to pay television and home video markets, reported earnings of $9,907,000, or 34 cents per share, on revenue of $40,342,000 for third fiscal quarter ended May 31, 1983. For nine months ended May 31, 1983, earnings were $27,991,000, or $1.01 per share, on revenue of $113,955,000. Company also declared first quarterly cash dividend of 15 cents per share on its common stock, payable Aug. 10 to shareholders of record July 22.

Disney's divvy. Walt Disney Productions announced third-quarter earnings for period ended June 30 were $21.4 million, or 61 cents per share, compared to $32.9 million, or $2.17 per share, for same period previous year. Revenue was up, however, from $275.8 million to $358.5 million for quarter, with overall operating income dropping from $67.8 million to $51 million. Decline in earnings was attributed primarily to $21 million write-off associated with movie entitled "Something Wicked This Way Comes," and $13.5 million loss associated with start-up of Disney Channel.

Private plus. Private Screenings Inc., New York-based supplier of adult programing to pay TV systems, reported fiscal third-quarter revenue of $377,300 or 44% increase over previous quarter, with earnings of $9,669. Private Screenings, public since May 1982, now has 80 films in its library and is traded OTC.

Goldman says partnership in USIC-GDS venture is still good thing despite recent arrival of third entry in field.

CTAM '83: Up next in San Diego

Delegates will be challenged to become involved in search for marketing excellence

A record 1,000 participants are expected as the annual conference and membership meeting of the Atlanta-based Cable Television Administration and Marketing Society takes place this week (Aug. 7-10) at the Town and Country hotel in San Diego.

"I'm very pleased with the turnout," CTAM executive director Dean Waite told BROADCAST last week. "Our membership is heavily skewed on the East Coast, and we expect to exceed the 900 participants we had last year in Chicago." Waite pointed out that CTAM's membership has risen 26%—from 923 to 1,162—during the intervening 12 months, which may help account for a high pre-registration total. On-site registration was to begin Sunday evening, followed by a welcoming reception.

"In Search of Marketing Excellence," the theme for CTAM '83, will be addressed from a wide range of industry perspectives each Monday morning as the conference gets under way with a two-hour panel session moderated by Don Gogel, a principal in the research firm of McKinsey & Co. Interviews, taped in advance with eight top cable executives, will highlight the segment.

Among those offering comments on the session topic—"The Commitment Begins at the Top"—will be: Ted Turner, president, Turner Broadcasting and WSB (TV) Atlanta; Jack Clifford, chairman, Colony Communications; Bill Daniels, chairman, Daniels & Associates; Drew Lewis, chairman and chief executive officer, Warner Amex Cable; Daniel Ritchie, chairman and chief executive officer, Group W Cable, and David Van Valkenburg, president and chief executive officer, Cox Cable Communications.

During the introductory session Gogel also will present and discuss research related to the best-selling book, "In Search of Excellence," as it relates to common characteristics of successful American companies.

"We're aspiring to the very highest levels of quality in marketing and management subjects," Waite explained. "We asked heads of cable companies from around the country how their firms related to the lessons of 'In Search of Excellence,' based on research into 'super performers' in American business.

"The concept of the conference is to start very generally, get a little more specific the afternoon of Monday and devote the second and third days to more detail as time goes on. Our hope is that as people get into roundtable discussions, they'll be ready to talk, participate and actively exchange information—and enjoy themselves in the process."

Monday afternoon's sessions will focus on ways to reach the so-called "untouchable" (nonsubscribing) viewers, plus dynamics of the multipay marketplace. The former will be led by Charlie Townsend, vice president of marketing and programming for United Cable Television Corp., who is credited with originating the "untouchables" term. Stephen Ste. Marie, vice president of marketing for Viacom Communications, will lead a session that asks: "Multipay: Can We Make It Work?"

Tuesday and Wednesday mornings are "Track Days," during which participants will choose among 16 separate seminars on topics falling into one of four central themes: "New Revenue Opportunities," "What Top Management Should Be on Top Of," "Re-marketing: Is Your Message Getting Through?" and "Retention: Are You Selling More and Enjoying It Less?"

These break-out sessions have been expanded from one day last year to two days this year," said Waite. "I think their potential is enhanced by having an open-ended roundtable discussion in the midst of Track Day" on Tuesday afternoon. The audience will participate as panelists in the two-hour session, moderated by Cindy Dennis, manager of marketing support for Cox Cable, and Matthew Black, vice president of consumer marketing for Home Box Office.

The conference adjourns Wednesday at 12:30 p.m.

Reps, advertisers, disagree on TV's future effectiveness

Vitt Media survey finds reps high on TV; advertisers looking for most efficient buys

The results of a nationwide survey conducted among advertisers and television representatives show a sharp division between them on how effective present and future television will be.

The survey was conducted by Vitt Media International, New York, which polled the top 900 spot television advertisers as well as 100 sellers of broadcast time. (Television networks were not included in the project.)

A detailed questionnaire, titled "The Medium for the Message?", drew responses from 14% of the advertisers and 50% of the representatives.

Although 70% of the advertiser respondents said that television still offers good value for their investments in comparison to other media, an equal number, 70%, reported that the trend toward smaller audience shares and more diverse viewing options has made the targeting of markets more difficult.

Only 25% said that television has grown more effective as a sales tool over the past five years, while 43% replied that TV has grown less effective during that period. And 45% of clients expressed the view that TV will become a less effective sales tool over the next five years.

Advertisers projected they will be turning to other approaches to increase the return on their TV investments in 1988. For example, 83% said they will use opportunistic spot buying in the next five years, as compared with 75% today; 91% said they would use cable, as against 51% today, and 29% said they anticipated using barter programing, up from 9% in 1983.

The survey among advertisers also found that shorter message blocks—whether in the form of "piggybacked" 30-second spots (two 15-second messages back-to-back) or isolated 10-second exposures—also will be employed five years from now.

In assaying TV program quality, 36% of clients felt that quality today is lower than five years ago, 20% said it was higher and 42% labeled it "unchanged."

The view from the national representatives side was almost diametrically opposite. For example, they called television a more effective sales tool today than five years ago (94%) and predicted the medium would be more effective five years from now (78%), with 20% saying they were not sure that TV would be unchanged. On program quality, 70% of the representatives said quality is higher today than five years ago and 20% said it was unchanged.

In some areas, buyers and sellers of television were not too far apart. For example, 56% of the sellers acknowledged that declining audience shares pose a "very serious" or "a moderately serious" threat to commercial stations.

Sellers also were asked to weigh the cable threat: 52% said cable would prove a "very serious" or a "moderately serious" threat to affiliated stations with 56% saying the same thing for independent stations.

Pointing to implications of the study, Vitt Media said that the findings show that television advertisers still regard the medium highly but are "finding it increasingly difficult to use television as cost effectively as in the past." Vitt said that "the perceived deterioration of television programs (by 36% of those surveyed) and a widespread belief that the networks are losing their reach...pose serious problems."

Television advertisers, Vitt continued, show no inclination to abandon the medium. The media planning and buying service said advertisers are experimenting with methods that "will enable them to continue to use television effectively despite unfavorable trends."

Thinking young

Mutual Broadcasting has embarked on a month-long study of the feasibility of launching an FM-oriented, young-adult programing service. The decision to study the issue was made during a recent management meetings in Richmond, Va. Jack Clements, senior vice president, Mutual Radio Network, is currently heading a task force comprising representatives from different network departments to examine the idea.

The company’s only venture thus far into young adult programing is its joint agreement with Doubleday Broadcasting to distribute the weekly Rock USA program. The show made its debut last April and now airs on 130 stations.

News facts

The average radio station programs 125 minutes of news each day, with AM stations airing significantly more news (154 minutes per day) than FM stations (85 minutes). Those are findings of a study commissioned by the Associated Press Broadcast Services and conducted by the research department of Needham, Harper & Steers Advertising, using a sample of 450 general managers, news and program directors.

Among the study’s other findings released last Thursday (Aug. 4) are:

- The average newscast is 5.2 minutes each hour, with most stations (71.1%) programming news at the top of the hour.
- Actualities are used by 85.8% of all stations, local actualities rated “more important” than regional/state and national/international.
- Full-time news directors are employed by 82.8% of all stations.
- One in five AM/FM combinations employ separate news directors.
- News wire services are bought and used as a primary source by 90.4% of stations.

The survey also showed that in selecting an audio news service or network, the most important concerns among radio executives are: credibility, technical quality, speed in reporting the facts, professionalism of the announcers and the reputation of the news source.

“We started these research projects in late 1977,” said Roy Steinfort. AP’s vice president and director of broadcasting. “Our first two, conducted two years apart by Frank Magid Associates and The Research Group, asked questions directly of listeners. Both studies showed about 85% used radio regularly as an information source,” he said.

Distinguished trustees

The title for the equipment that distributes programing to several hundred public radio stations is being transferred from National Public Radio to three trustees (seated, l-r): Elliot L. Richardson, Virginia Duncan and Henry Geller, who signed an agreement late last Tuesday night (Aug. 2). Also on hand were (standing, l-r): Donald Mullally, NPR board chairman; Edward Pfister, CPB president, and Ronald Bornstein, NPR acting chief operating officer.

The title transfer was urged by the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, which made it a condition for loaning the radio network $8.5 million because it felt the distribution system would be in danger until NPR was clear of its current debt. The loan was also signed Tuesday night. The three trustees will oversee the operation and management of the equipment by National Public Radio on behalf of the 264 NPR member stations who are the beneficiaries of the trust. NPR is managing the system under a three-year lease, at $10 a year.

Radiotext

How does a radio station become a part of the “information age”? WPRW AM/USA Manassas, Va., thinks it has the answer. For the past two- and-a-half months, it has been providing news and information for a videotext trial being conducted in that suburban Washington community by the Atlanta-based Continental Telecom Inc. and it is enthusiastic about the new medium.

“If radio does not become involved in some way with the high-tech information age,” the station said in an 11-page summary of its involvement in the 100-home trial, “then we are sure to be left behind as consumers find other ways to receive the information they need.”

After accepting Continental’s offer to join local merchants, newspapers, schools, magazines, movie theaters, government agencies and others as “information providers” for Contelvision, the 5,000-watt station set a secretary and two newswomen to the task of gathering information, typing it into a computer terminal supplied by Continental and sending it electronically to the Contelvision database. The station currently contributes local and state news, weather, sports, the station’s adult contemporary playlist, a lost and found for pets and public service announcements.

According to the station, its offerings have been well received. “In early usage statistics . . . news and information” ranks second right behind ‘games’ in terms of popularity,” it said. “Of the four providers of ‘news and information’ WPRW ranks second behind UPI and ahead of the two local papers in popularity. The most accessed WPRW offerings are weather, sports, local news and PSA’s.”

The station plans to remain a Contelvision information provider as the service is expanded to involve 1,000 homes in Manassas and Baltimore by fall 1984. During this “commercial phase,” the station said, an electronic banking and shopping channel will be added to the service.

Radio activity

The National Radio Broadcasters Association made a pitch for the radio-only deregulation legislation in the House. The association sent a letter to Representatives John Dingell (D-Mich.) and Tim Wirth (D-Colo.), chairman of Energy and Commerce Committee and Telecommunications Subcommittee, respectively, urging them to introduce and support a radio-only bill. "On behalf of all 8,000 commercial radio broadcasters in the U.S., we respectfully urge you to introduce and to support passage in the U.S. House of Representatives a radio-only deregulation bill that will, once and for all, bring radio out from under the shadow of television into the sunlight of radio's unique place in American life," the letter said. The NRBA's executive committee also issued a statement referring to the formation of the Major Market Television Caucus and called it "welcomed recognition by some segments of the industry that its interests can best be served through organizations whose objectives are limited to the interests of those particular groups." Also approved by NRBA were the date and location of the association's 1984 convention—Sept. 16-19 at the Westin Bonaventure hotel, Los Angeles.

Beantown country

Boston has its first FM country music station in six years, following the switch from rock music last month by WBOX(FM), licensed to suburban Brookline, Mass. According to program director Dean James, the station will switch from an automated contemporary country format to live announcers beginning next Monday (Aug. 15). Advertising is starting to pick up as a result of the change, James said. "There wasn't enough money to go around with six other major stations [in Boston] doing some form of rock 'n' roll," he said.

Top 10 tally

National spot radio dollars for the top 10 markets are up 9.5% in the first half of 1983, according to Radio Expenditure Reports Inc. (RER), which relies on data supplied confidentially by 15 rep firms. Markets that posted increases: New York, 15.4%; Los Angeles, 19.6%; Chicago, 13.6%; San Francisco, 11.8%; Philadelphia, 3.7%; Detroit, 6.5%; Boston, 2.0%; Houston, 21.0% and Dallas-Fort Worth, 8.4%. The only top 10 market that registered a decrease, according to RER, was Washington, 2.5%. The top 10 markets account for 52.3% of all expenditures in the top 50 markets. Overall, national radio spot radio dollars for the first six months of 1983 were 10% ahead of the same period last year ("In Brief," Aug. 1).

Trivia time

CBS's RadioRadio Network reports more than 200 stations nationwide have signed up for its Memory Makers music special, scheduled to air the weekend of Aug. 12-14. The three-hour program will rely heavily on trivia questions about contemporary artists and their music and will be designed so that local stations can break away to quiz listeners themselves. One major advertiser for the special is S.C. Johnson's Agape shampoo, through J Walter Thompson. Producer of the program is The Creative Factor of Holly-twood. The network also plans to offer a six-hour music special on Labor Day (Sept. 5) featuring more than 20 acts recorded live in concert. Veteran radio personality Scotty Brink will host the show, called Concert Over America. TM Companies of Dallas is producing the program for RadioRadio.

Lewis Erlicht: ABC’s man in the programing hotseat

Having worked his way up through ABC, Entertainment head aims to plug network’s programing holes

If Lewis H. Erlicht, the new ABC Entertainment president, is under pressure to keep the network from slipping into third place, he doesn’t show it. As ABC’s chief of all programing except news and sports, he is responsible for 62 hours of television fare each week, about 68% of the network’s schedule.

And, lately, ABC has shown signs of the bad old days, when it used to be identified as the third network in a two-and-a-half network race. To be sure, the present situation is far from that, but ABC has lost ground this summer, while the fortunes of another long-depressed network have continued to rise.

By several accounts—including Erlicht’s—ABC has put in charge a programmer who is not predisposed to the New York-Hollywood philosophy of television production which is sometimes criticized for ignoring public taste west of the Hudson and east of Rodeo Drive. Although born and raised in New York, Erlicht has served a tour in what some Manhattanites would call the hinterlands. He was sales manager and later general manager of ABC’s owned-and-operated WLS-TV Chicago. According to Erlicht, and to others in the programing community, he brings to the business not only a sense of what plays in New York and Hollywood, but in Peoria as well.

It may be a skill for which ABC has particular need at the moment. In daytime ratings, ABC fell to second place for three weeks before inching back on top by one-tenth of a rating point for the week ending Friday, July 22. “What is occurring now, we knew would happen,” Erlicht says. In daytime, Erlicht attributes the problem—although he doesn’t view it as such—to Loving, ABC’s new morning serial. Erlicht points out that the introduction of a new serial, and in the morning at that, is likely to have an immediate but short-term effect on the ratings. He explains that the payback will come in the better demographics a serial, as opposed to a game show, for example, is bound to attract. Erlicht also noted that once a serial gets rolling, it can roll for 25 or 30 years—far longer than any game show.

Erlicht recognizes the immediate impact Loving has had on ABC’s daytime ratings, but has a ready answer. “We will not be number one in daytime until the show starts increasing its general audience. But we will be number one by an overwhelming preponderance of 18-49 women, and that’s the core of daytime. I will guarantee that the preponderance of a lead over the competition in demographics has not gone down.”

Erlicht blames the slump in ABC’s summer prime time ratings, in part, on the return of Masada which “did not live up to our expectations. It averaged an 8.9 rating over four nights, a poor third—we projected about a 22, 23 share, and it came in at a 16.” But Erlicht also explains “summer has notoriously been a time when strange things happen.” He cites as examples ABC’s Dynasty and CBS’s Dallas, “the two giants of TV.” Those shows, which are strong performers during the regular season, “have not repeated well since day one,” Erlicht said.

“The name of this game is season,” said Erlicht. In his view, overall performance in 1982-83 will be evaluated on how the network did from September through May, “and not on our performance during the summer.”

Still, ABC is taking no chances and is using the summer of 1983 as a laboratory to experiment with new programing ideas. Biggest among those ideas are the limited series: two dramas, two comedies and one variety-style program that are premiering this summer on a limited run. According to Erlicht, the experiment has another purpose besides trying to stem the summer drift away from all networks to cable, pay television and the beaches. Each of the limited series—one of which two have already debuted—has the opportunity to reappear as a possible mid-season replacement, he said, should it prove successful.

The first of ABC’s new summer programs, The 1/2 Hour Comedy Hour, which debuted July 5, has not performed as well as hoped, but Erlicht attributes it to the “difficult time period” where it airs. It competes with CBS News’s On the Road with Charles Kuralt and NBC’s A Team. Erlicht added that “we’re looking at the show qualitatively to see what elements there are positive, and it is certainly a candidate for additional episodes.”

Erlicht has headed the Entertainment division barely two months, so his overall impact cannot yet be measured. But his is a familiar face around ABC’s West Coast offices. Prior to his appointment, he was senior vice president for prime time, and has been a vice president with ABC Entertainment since 1977. Contrary to the image of the Hollywood wheeler-dealer, he has the appearance—and projection—of a corporate lawyer or investment banker, which, unlike many others in the business, he never was. He refers to programing as a “people business,” and indicates that managing people is what he does best.

According to his resume, Erlicht is the portrait of the company man. He joined ABC 21 years ago to take a summer job in research in spot TV sales, and in his broadcasting career has never worked for anyone else. During college, Erlicht considered becoming a clinical psychologist, did some graduate study in the field and went to work in a state mental hospital in the locked, semi-violen ward. Later, he and his wife supervised a center for retarded children.

Erlicht downplays any correlation between his early interest in psychology and his current one in finding television programs that will attract the greatest audience. "If there's a connection, then it's an unconscious one," he says.

He demurs when asked if his operating style is significantly different from that of his predecessor, Tony Thomopoulos, who was promoted to president of the ABC Broadcast Group (Erlicht reports to John Severino, president of the ABC Television Network). Erlicht answered that the only difference he ever had with Thomopoulos is when a program should air, not what program should air.

The problem of keeping viewers loyal to network television, Erlicht seems to think, is in providing as much original product as possible, and in the future even more than in the past. ABC's 1983-84 season is tied up with the Olympics and election year coverage, both outside Erlitch's responsibility. And although Erlicht tends to play it close to the vest in discussing the network's future programming strategy, he's made it no secret that theatrical films will play a decreasing role in the entertainment schedule, with the slack taken up by an increasing number of made-for-TV films. Erlitch doesn't specify when, but he acknowledges that ABC is "heading toward the day" when made-for-TV films, rather than theatrical films, "will be the predominant product."

Theatricals, he said, are so time consuming that increasing average price per picture and "the diminishing return of the audience because of its mass exposure on pay TV."

Erlitch has no problem agreeing that cable, pay TV and other new technologies are getting viewers' attention. But he also believes it possible for broadcast television to "overreact" about the audience losses. The other programming sources, he said, "haven't shaken out yet."

"I don't think we know where they're going, what they're going to program, what impact they will have, how long people are willing to pay for what they usually get free, to what degree pay and cable will go into other forms of programming...You see trends for maybe the short term."

For Erlicht, little has changed in television's basics—or the art and business of entertaining, for that matter—since the beginning. What he stresses is that the content has changed, shifting with public attitudes and tastes. At ABC, he said, entertainment programming becomes a function of who is watching television. The business, he likes to note, is "out of its infancy." But not all content changes permitted by the audiences' changing attitudes will be adopted by ABC. "There appears to be a changing acceptance of different moral standards which we have not yet reacted to," he said. "For instance, on pay and cable, you now have nudity and in many cases soft-core pornography that is pretty much accepted in those households, which has never occurred before. I want to make it very clear we will not do that. We will not counter that specific challenge."

However, more of a challenge for Erlich than the changing morality is the "changing American household," which he sees as doing more things in the face of prime time programming than the public's acceptance of nudity on cable and pay television. Formerly, he explained, when there was only one television set per household, control was firmly in the hands of children. But as multiset households grew and the average household size shrank, that is no longer the case, he said.

"Set control in the early evening has reverted to the adult, and because of the fragmentation of the audience—and you cannot get away from that—that's a big change we have to adapt to. It changes our program philosophy as well," Erlitch said.

An example of that, he pointed out, was the Happy Days spin-off, Joanie Loves Chachi, which at the time ABC decided not to renew it for next season, aired on Thursday at 8 p.m. It was "a show we thought was terrific," Erlitch explained. "Creatively there was nothing we would have changed," but "its appeal was too young, we couldn't generate an audience and get it off the ground." The show lasted one season.

But except for a sharper focus on the adult viewer, Erlitch suggests that those whom he believes are "the pay TV audience" have a point of view. He said, "try to keep a balance...There are no rules. You have what is right as a flow." Erlitch noted that this year ABC has eight sitcoms (four new), down from a high of 12, while CBS has 6 and NBC a record 10. "You try to present as diverse a schedule as possible, because ultimately that is the mix for an all-around network."

But due to Olympic and heavy election year coverage, ABC will have the worst mini-series next year and two compared to five each by CBS and NBC. Of them, The Last Days of Pompeii, Erlitch said, has a "good chance" to run in the May sweeps. He added the network will save good product for the sweeps periods.

The formal boundaries that used to define a network season—at least at ABC—are slowly dissolving as new product continues to be introduced throughout the year. "Last year at the ABC upfront I made a point of saying, 'When is midseason?' Midseason used to be January when you put on three new shows and that would be it. Midseason now is any time from December through May." And introducing new product for a third time in the summer further blurs the old boundaries, he said, "so that it's one season where you make changes within the season."

About one upcoming program in particular, Erlicht has nothing to say. It is a made-for TV movie titled The Day After, a story about life in the wake of a nuclear attack. He called it "one of the most important things ever produced at ABC." The movie, he said, takes no position and has no message, but "there will be more discussion generated after seeing this film than on anything we've ever done before."

Erlitch deflected a question wondering whether the network was trying to take advantage of the public's growing concern about nuclear war, and he called reports that ABC was producing the drama because it was expected to generate "smash ratings" an absolute untruth. Erlitch stressed that "in all the discussions I've had with either Brandon [Stoddard, ABC Motion Pictures president], or Fred [Pierce, ABC Inc. president] or Tony [Thomopoulos, president of ABC Broadcast Group], we have never once discussed audience...A project like this transcends your feeling to grab an audience all the time."

Ratings Roundup

NBC-TV moved to the top of the prime time ratings for the week ended July 31—a week so competitive that half a rating point was all that stood between third place and first. NBC had an average 12.3 Nielsen rating and 24 share, while CBS-TV came in with a 12.1/24 and ABC-TV with an 11.8/23.

NBC did it primarily with repeats of regular series and specials and with two movies, Dorothy Stratten Story on Monday (16.9/31) and Hunt to Kill on Sunday (16.0/29), that ranked among the week's Top 10.

The premiere of The Hamptons, ABC's new series, Wednesday at 9-10 p.m. N.Y.T, scored a 13.8/25, enough to rank 18th for the week but fractionally behind its lead-in, a Fall Guy repeat (13.9/29), although well ahead of its lead-out, a Dynasty repeat (10.5/19).

Among other summer series, CBS's Our Times with Bill Moyers on Tuesday at 8:30-9 p.m. produced an 11.9/21 and its lead-in, On the Road with Charles Kuralt, did an 11.8/22, while NBC's Buffalo Bill on Wednesday at 9:30-10 p.m. had an 11.8/21—all in the same ballpark with their earlier performances.

President Reagan's news conference at 8 p.m. Tuesday got all three networks off to a late start at 8:30 that evening, CBS and NBC clipped their schedules by that much, although NBC wound up at 11:30 instead of 11:35 by joining its windup show St. Elsewhere, "in progress." ABC dropped its 8 p.m. Ve Hour Comedy Hour, for that evening and closed at 11:09 p.m.

NBC won Monday and Tuesday nights, ABC won Wednesday and Saturday and CBS took Thursday, Friday and Sunday.

Dawson pushes for expansion of TV dereg

Commissioner says FCC should look beyond rulemaking and radio deregulation order to free TV broadcasters from agency policies

The FCC's proposal to deregulate television has presented a "tremendous" opportunity to take "significant" steps toward eliminating commission-generated policies, especially in asking how far the agency can go in removing its own regulations from television broadcasters, according to Commissioner Mimi Weyforth Dawson. Dawson issued a statement amplifying a point she had made when the commission unanimously adopted the notice of proposed rulemaking (BROADCASTING, July 4).

"In essence, the notice of proposed rulemaking asks whether the time may have come for a return to the regulatory basics of the [Communications] Act and for the repudiation of the regulatory baggage that the commission—not the Communications Act—has imposed on television broadcasters," Dawson said. "Such an approach, in my reading of the act, would mean that: (1) There would be no requirement to ascertain communities of license; (2) there would be no commercialization standards; (3) there would be no requirement for certain kinds of programming, except for those required by the act... and (4) there would be no program log requirement, except for those logs necessary to assure compliance with statutory programming obligations.

"Obviously this approach would go further than the FCC was willing to go in the radio deregulation decision, where the commission replaced formal programming and ascertainment requirements with more general standards. However, it should be noted that a similar approach was proposed in the radio deregulation notice of proposed rulemaking although it was not finally adopted," she said.

"Dawson said she thought this "statutory approach"—which the commission included in the rulemaking at her suggestion—had much to commend it. It would "avoid the largely ritualistic" regulatory burdens imposed by the FCC for no particular statutory reason, she said, and would "avoid what I view as a critical failing of the radio deregulation decision—the replacement of specific ascertainment and programming guidelines with amorphous ones."

"I do not accept the view that the current FCC may do no more with regard to television deregulation than retrace the steps of a prior commission with regard to radio deregulation," she said. "Courts have consistently recognized that the commission, as an expert regulatory agency, is entitled to great deference in its policy decisions and that its statutory construction should be followed unless clearly incorrect."

Dawson, moreover, contended that nothing inside the Communications Act appeared to require the commission to impose ascertainment and informational obligations on broadcasters. "Assuming the commission could provide a reasonable explanation of its action, nothing appears to keep the commission from relying exclusively on the structures of the act in this area," she said.

While the Court of Appeals has asked the commission to take another stab at its elimination of logging requirements in its radio deregulation order (BROADCASTING, May 10), Dawson said nothing in the "statutory approach" would be "necessarily inconsistent" with the court's decision. Since the FCC, in its radio order, had not relied totally on the market and the decisions of individual licensees to set the amounts of nonentertainment programming, the court had stated no opinion on that, she noted.

"I see no reason why the commission may not view the radio deregulation decision as a point of departure rather (than) as an absolute limit. And my initial reaction is that reliance on statutory requirements rather than commission-generated standards is the best hope of bringing significant deregulatory relief to television licensees and more diverse program choice to the American people."

Dawson also said she thought comment was "critical" on what appropriate market the commission should be looking at, if it is to rely on video-market competition as a rationale for "significant" television deregulation. "It is significant that the commission asks for comments on the scope of both the product and geographic markets for television and whether the relevant geographic market should be viewed primarily as a local or a national market," she said.

In addition, she said, it was "critical" that the rulemaking ask whether the FCC must link its deregulation to the existence of competition, as it did in its radio deregulation order. She said she wasn't convinced that competition was the only basis for deregulation, and said the notice proposes several alternatives. "The most promising of these alternative rationales seems to be a straightforward cost-benefit analysis," she said.

"Quite simply, if the subject rules and policies do little or nothing to advance their various goals, then they would be likely candidates for elimination, especially where the costs to broadcasters are substantial."

Snarling at Red Lion. The Supreme Court's landmark Red Lion case, which upheld the fairness doctrine, should not be used as an excuse for refusing to consider whether the termination of broadcast content regulation would satisfy the public interest standard of the Communications Act, Bruce Fein, FCC general counsel, said in a speech before the American Bar Association convention in Atlanta last week.

In that decision, Fein noted, the court sustained the fairness doctrine, "as expounded by the commission," against First Amendment attack, holding that the doctrine was a "permissible administrative elucidation" of the public interest standard, and that fairness obligations weren't inconsistent with the First Amendment goal of producing an informed electorate. "The court, however, did not foreclose the possibility that more experience with the fairness doctrine, constitutional developments, substantial growth in capacity for program transmission and further reflection might lead the commission to conclude that this First Amendment goal might be better advanced and the public interest more completely vindicated by terminating government regulation of programing content," Fein said.

"The aging fairness doctrine and its first cousins under the Communications Act are vulnerable to Justice Holmes' acid remonstrance that it is revolting to have no better reason for a rule of law than that it was laid down in the time of Henry IV. It is still more revolting if the grounds upon which it was laid down have vanished long since, and the rule simply persists from blind imitation from the past," Fein said. "The public interest suggests a need to prepare an epitaph to celebrate the burial of content regulation of broadcast programming and renewed confidence in our constitutional theory of self government."

Advertising makes progress in FTC authorization bill

Redefinition of unfairness standard plus commission authorizing legislation is part of action by Senate Commerce Committee

The advertising industry's efforts to gain relief from the Federal Trade Commission's "unfairness" standard for advertising and trade practices made some headway in the Senate last week. The Senate Commerce Committee unanimously adopted an FTC reauthorization measure (S. 1714) that would redefine the commission's unfairness standard and partially exempt advertisers from jurisdiction under the standard in all rulemakings except on a case-by-case basis.

The committee's action is viewed by the advertising industry as an important move. Advertising trade associations have been lobbying Congress for more than a year to gain the exemption. (It would codify the 1980 temporary moratorium on the use of the unfairness standard in rulemakings concerned with advertising.) Although advertisers wanted "total exclusion" from the standard, an industry spokesman said, they are pleased with the modification. S. 1714 also reauthorizes the FTC for funding levels of $71.1 million in FY 1984, $71.1 million in FY 1985, and $71.4 million in FY 1986.

Both FTC Chairman James Miller and advertising trade associations asked the committee to revise the commission's current unfairness standard. The definition included in the measure is similar to one Miller proposed five months ago (BROADCASTING, March 21). It would limit "unfair acts or practices to acts or practices that have caused or are likely to cause substantial injury to consumers which is not reasonably avoidable by consumers themselves and not outweighed by countervailing benefits to consumers or competition. This definition would circumscribe the commission's consumer unfairness authority for both rulemakings and case-by-case adjudications."

Miller and the advertising industry also advocated revising the commission's "deceptive" advertising and trade practices standard. That proposal, however, was coolly received by the Senate committee and is absent from the bill.

The partial exemption for advertisers was contained in an amendment offered by Senator Slade Gorton (R-Wash.). Gorton introduced the amendment as an alternative to another amendment offered earlier by Senator Robert Kasten (R-Wis.) which would grant advertisers complete exemption from the unfairness standard.

There was sharp division among committee members over Gorton's amendment. After considerable debate, however, the amendment passed by a vote of 8 to 7. Senators Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.), John Danforth (R-Mo.), Nancy Kassebaum (R-Kan.), Gorton, Paul Trible (R-Va.), Frank Lautenberg (D-N.J.), Bob Packwood (R-Ore.), chairman of the committee, and Kasten voted in favor of the amendment. Those opposed were Senators Ted Stevens (R-Alaska), Ernest Hollings (D-S.C.), Russell Long (D-La.), Wendell Ford (D-Ky.), Donald Riegle (D-Mich.), James Exon (D-Nebr.) and Howell Heflin (D-Ala.).

Packwood, who opposed any exclusion for advertisers in the past, stated his support for the Gorton amendment and said he would fight for the measure in the House-Senate conference on the bill. The House bill contains the same definition for the unfairness standard, but does not include any exemption for advertisers. Ford, however, argued against maintaining any FTC authority over so-called unfair advertising.

Last year Congress was unable to move any adjournment legislation through either the House or Senate. Several controversial issues, including an exemption for advertisers, kept legislation from moving. And some attempts to curtail FTC authority over state-regulated professional groups also slowed progress. S. 1714 includes a compromise worked out by Packwood, Miller and the American Medical Association that would bar the FTC from pre-empting state laws that:

1. Establish training, educational, or experience requirements for licensing professionals.
2. Establish permissible tasks or duties that professionals may perform based on specialized training or education.
3. Limit FTC antitrust authority when the method of competition is regulated by the state.

It is expected that debate will surface on the floor over establishing a legislative veto provision in the bill and granting lawyers an exemption from FTC authority.

The measure would also:

1. Repeal the FTC's authority to compensate public participants in commission rulemakings.
2. End the present requirement for an automatic stay of commission cease and desist orders pending appeal, and, with some exceptions, provide instead that commission orders may be stayed by the commission itself or by the courts (within their discretion) during the appellate process.

Broadcasters want greater deregulation of FM subcarriers

The FCC's deregulation of FM subcarrier use (BROADCASTING, April 11) didn't go far enough, according to broadcasters in filings at the commission last week.

According to several petitions for partial reconsideration, the FCC also should refrain from common carrier regulation of subsidiary communications authorization offerings and pre-empt state regulation.

The National Association of Broadcasters, for instance, said the FCC's failure to forbear from imposing common carrier regulation and its refusal to pre-empt state and local regulation will stifle development of a number of potential subcarrier uses. "The result will be continued underutilization of the FM spectrum," it said.

The law firm of Fletcher, Heald & Hildreth agreed with that sentiment and asked that the FCC application process for prospective common carrier SCA paging operators be streamlined. It contended that paging was the "only significant market opened" for SCA's. "To insure that its policy goals are attained, the commission should pre-empt state common carrier paging entry requirements and standards involving need for service, harm to existing carriers and preferences favoring existing carriers to the exclusion of the new entrant."

Reach Inc., which is jointly owned by Reach Electronics Inc. and Selection Research Inc. (and was formed to develop the market for SCA paging devices and to create a national SCA paging network) also requested state pre-emption.

Meanwhile, the Telocator Network of America, which represents existing paging operators, said the order should be dumped altogether.

At a minimum, Telocator said, the commission should establish a general policy of granting waivers to radio common carriers of transmitter height and power restriction, "upon only a showing that doing so would not result in harmful interference to any co-channel station," in any area to which a Class C1 or Class C FM station assignment has been allocated.

Trade secrets exposed. The Tennessee State Board of Architectural and Engineering Examiners has arrived at the "opinion" that Edward M. Johnson & Associates Inc., the Knoxville-based communications consulting firm, has been violating state law in offering "full engineering services" without having filed the proper disclosure forms, a board spokeswoman said last week.

According to the spokeswoman, Edward M. Johnson, company president, will be "advised" of the board's opinion. The board will await Johnson's response before taking further action, she said.

The board's action came in response to a complaint by Ronald D. Rackley, a Washington-area communications engineer, who alleged that Johnson, who is not a registered engineer, has claimed in advertisements and in affidavits at the FCC that he is qualified in engineering (BROADCASTING, July 18), in violation of Tennessee law.

Meanwhile, some concern is being expressed in Washington communications law and engineering firms about some of Johnson's application-filing techniques, which were highlighted in a deposition for a lawsuit Johnson has filed against a former employee in Tennessee.

According to the deposition, one of Johnson's "trade secrets"—he is alleging that the former employee is using his "trade secrets" to benefit a competing firm—lies in knowing what name to use for an applicant. "In the filing of the application in the name of an entity that would say, 'Blacks Desiring Media,' whether blacks, whether whites, whatever it is, will get less competing applications filed against them," Johnson pointed out.

Another secret of the trade, Johnson said, is to first file an application the potential competitors will consider defective, then clean it up with an amendment.

Yet another strategy, Johnson said, is to file for a smaller community when intending to serve a larger one nearby. "If you wanted Knoxville, you might be in better competitive shape applying for Seymour," he said.
Standards chief

Former FCC commissioner and general counsel Stephen A. Sharp has been named chairman of the Industry Advisory Committee on Technical Standards for DBS Service. The committee was established to advise the FCC on whether it should adopt national standards for DBS and, if the FCC decides it should, to help it develop those standards.

A practitioner and teacher of communications law, Sharp joined the FCC as general counsel in 1981 and was appointed commissioner in the fall of 1982. Due to legislation cutting back the number of FCC commissioners from seven to five, however, Sharp’s term expired on June 30. He joined the Washington law firm of Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher and Flom, for which he is establishing a telecommunications practice.

MDS application due soon

The FCC set the deadline for filing applications for the eight new MDS channels in each market, Sept. 9. But the prospective multichannel MDS operators ought not to be too eager. The FCC said applications submitted prior to Sept. 2 will not be accepted and all applications submitted prior to Sept. 9...will be treated as though they were filed on Sept. 9.

In an effort to make MDS competitive with cable, the FCC reallocated two blocks of four channels in each market from the Instructional Television Fixed Service to MDS, bringing the total number of MDS channels in each market to 10.

If ITS broadcasters already hold the license for the reallocated blocks (or even if they have just applied for them) in a given market, the grant of the MDS construction permit will be conditioned on the permittees obtaining permission from the ITS license (or applicant) to use the channels.

Under the FCC rules, the MDS markets correspond to the various “statistical areas” established and revised June 27 by the Office of Management and Budget. The areas included Metropolitan Statistical Areas (MSA’s), Consolidated Metropolitan Statistical Areas (CMSA’s), Primary Metropolitan Statistical Areas (PMSA’s) and New England County Metropolitan Areas (NECMA’s). All applications for channels in or within 15 miles of these statistical areas must refer to them by name.

Mutually exclusive applications will be set aside and the permittee in such situations will be determined by lottery. The FCC has the power to use a lottery, but the special rules for the MDS lottery have yet to be established. As a result, the FCC plans to launch a rulemaking shortly (perhaps this week) to set the parameters for the MDS lottery.

Although the FCC’s common carrier bureau fears a deluge of applications, it will send a packet of material containing applications and directions for filling them out to whoever asks for them.

Return of the Telstars

Telstar IIIA, the first of three C-band communications satellites that will make up AT&T’s Telstar system, was soaring through space in its temporary geostationary orbit (66 degrees west longitude) last week, undergoing a routine checkup following its launch a week earlier. The 24-transponder satellite will be moved gradually to its permanent spot at 96 degrees west, said AT&T spokeswoman Gill Purpura, and should be ready for service in three to five weeks.

AT&T was a pioneer in satellite communications. In 1962, it launched Telstar I, the first satellite to be built and launched with private funds and the first to relay television pictures across the Atlantic Ocean. A year later, it launched Telstar II. But despite its important role in the history of satellite communications, AT&T decided to lease satellite capacity from Comsat rather than launching its own satellites during the satellite revolution of the 1970’s. The decision to rent, Purpura said, was based on regulations that limited the types of services that AT&T could offer via satellites. With the lifting of those regulations over the past several years, however, she said, satellite ownership began to make sense to the company.

The Hughes-built Telstar IIIA was launched by NASA from Cape Canaveral Air Force Station, Fla., aboard a Delta 3920/PAM rocket on July 28 at 6:49 p.m. NYT. Two days later, at 8:10 p.m. NYT, the satellite’s apogee kick motor was fired, boosting it from its initial elliptical orbit into the circular geostationary orbit, some 22,300 miles above the equator. Said Purpura: “Everything has been on schedule and extremely successful.”

Transponders for ABC

ABC-TV expects to sign a long-term lease within the next few weeks for at least three transponders on a single satellite, according to Bill Hynes, director of telecommunications for the network. The transponders will enable the network to distribute the bulk of its programing without AT&T landlines in the Pacific, mountain and central time zones, he said. A fourth transponder may ultimately prove necessary, he said, to help with the distribution of regional programing and commercials. (For the time being, he said, the network will stick with AT&T landlines for distribution of programing in the Eastern time zone.) The network will probably lease C-band (4/6 ghz) transponders, he said, but from whom and on what bird have yet to be determined. All the satellite carriers, he said, “have their advantages and disadvantages.”

In the running: RCA, Western Union, AT&T, Southern Pacific and Ford.

ABC is already phasing in its satellite distribution system in Washington, using transponders it leases on Satcom IV and Comstar III. Affiliates in Washington, New Mexico, Arizona and parts of Texas and Missouri receive their network programing either directly from the satellites or over non-AT&T regional terrestrial networks fed by the satellites.

On the other hand

The Lexington (Ky.) Herald-Leader and TeleCable of Lexington will pull the plug Oct. 31 on TelePress, a joint venture that has been offering an experimental teletext service over three TeleCable channels for the past 16 months. “Our conclusion is that at this time in Lexington there is insufficient demand among both viewers and advertisers for such a service to make it self-supporting in the foreseeable future,” said Creed Black, publisher of the Herald-Leader in a prepared statement. “We are, therefore, terminating our joint venture with TeleCable at the end of the experimental period...instead of exercising our contractual option to continue the service for a minimum of three more years.” According to the Herald-Leader, the newspaper lost around $350,000 on the experiment.

TelePress devoted one of its three channels to Herald-Leader and wire services, one to sports and a third to public service announcements and classified advertisements.
USCI picks up two contractors

Atlantic Satellite will uplink programming, while DCC keeps track of availabilities

United Satellite Communications Inc., which hopes to launch a five-channel direct broadcast satellite service Nov. 15, will have the help of at least two companies—Atlantic Satellite Communications Inc., Northvale, N.J., and Data Communications Corp., Memphis.

Under a four-year contract, signed June 24 and valued at more than $14 million, BROADCASTING learned last week, Atlantic will handle the mechanics of uplinking USCI's programming to Telesat Canada's Anik C-U, the communications satellite that will broadcast it to USCI's subscribers. Atlantic, which was formed in February 1982 to uplink programming for the now defunct cable network, The Entertainment Channel, is a subsidiary of Video Services Corp., also of Northvale, which provides tape dubbing and standards conversion services through other subsidiaries.

DCC announced last week it reached a tentative three-year agreement with USCI on July 22 to provide the prospective DBS operator with its BIAS on-line traffic and program scheduling service. Officials for DCC and USCI declined to comment on the value of their deal, but it's substantial. Skip Sawyer, vice president, sales, DCC, said a television station in a medium-sized market receiving a comparable service would pay between $60,000 and $100,000 for the necessary computer terminal equipment and around $4,000 a month for the service.

Backed by General Instrument and Prudential Insurance Corp. of America, USCI plans to offer its five-channel service to subscribers in 26 states in the Northeast, Midwest and Southeast. To receive the service, subscribers will need a four-foot earth station. Programming will consist of two, 24-hour-a-day movie channels, similar to Home Box Office, and three advertiser-supported cable networks, two of which will probably contain news and sports. USCI will derive revenues from the monthly subscription fees and, judging from its deal with DCC, from the sale of availabilities on the cable networks which were originally intended for sale by cable affiliates.

USCI, which has been trying to keep a low profile of late, confirmed the existence of the agreements, but was reluctant to elaborate on the comments of the DCC and Atlantic officials. In fact, USCI officials were upset by DCC's announcement, which they felt was premature.

According to Bob Watt, president of Atlantic (and former director of operations for Home Box Office), Atlantic will create USCI's two 24-hour-a-day movie channels. It will receive the videotapes of the movies from USCI and, using an array of videotape machines and a Ku-band earth station, uplink them, in the appropriate sequence, to Anik C-II for broadcast, he said. It will also downlink the three advertiser-supported cable networks from either Satcom III-R or Westar V or both, he said, and uplink them along with the movie channels. Atlantic is also responsible, he said, for inserting the USCI-sold advertisement in the cable networks. (USCI claims it has yet to make a deal with any cable network, but Watt said he believes one of the three will be Satellite News Channel, the joint venture of ABC and Group W.)

Three-party exchange. Principals of Sabre Broadcasting Corp., Malrite Communications Group and Heritage Broadcasting met in Washington last Monday to finalize the sale of WNNM (100.3 mhz) Newark, N.J., and wcitv (ABC, ch. 12), New Bern, N.C. Sabre sold wcitv (BROADCASTING, June 27) to Malrite Communications group for $8.5 million. Malrite in turn sold wcitv to Heritage for $9 million. Seated (l to r): Herb Saltzman, part-owner of Sabre; Carl Hirth, president, Malrite, and Mario Iacobelli, president of Heritage. Standing (l to r): Donald G. Solness, part-owner of Sabre; G1 Rosenwald, executive vice president of Malrite; Edwin Tornberg, broker for sale, and Robert N. Smith, vice president, Heritage.

To do the job, Atlantic has amassed a panoply of video playback and satellite reception and transmission equipment. According to Watt, all the programming will be uplinked on a 9.2-meter Ku-band earth station with six transmitters (five operational and one back-up), supplied by Satellite Transmission Systems Inc. of Hauppauge, N.Y. The cable programing will be pulled off the cable satellites by two 11-meter C-band earth stations, he said. For playing the movies and recorded specials, Atlantic has 17 Ampex one-inch videotape recorders and, for the commercials, an Ampex two-inch cartridge machine. The video will flow through one of five Grass Valley switchers and a Control Video Corp. automation system.

In addition to tracking advertising availabilities and handling program scheduling for USCI, Sawyer said, the BIAS system will make sales projections and reconcile the log and accounts receivable. He noted that BIAS, in one of its many variations, is now used in some 215 television stations and 60 radio stations.

On Sept. 26, DCC will begin to install the Turned down. Judge Jack W. Swink, the Los Angeles Superior Court judge presiding in the slander case filed by Dr. Carl A. Galloway against CBS News, turned down Galloway's request for a new trial ("In Brief," Aug. 1). In denying the retrial motion Swink said "the court is convinced that both sides had a fair trial."

Galloway said he would appeal the case following Swink's action. A jury ruled 10-2 against Galloway last June, deciding the physician was not slandered in a 1979 episode of 60 Minutes.
Both Watt and Sawyer were impressed by USCI's commitment to the DBS business and its eagerness to get started. USCI first contacted DCC in early May, Sawyer said. "They have moved very fast and they are still moving very fast."

Presidential tape

President Reagan was host as well as guest of The McLaughlin Group, a weekly, half-hour panel news show on NBC's WRC-TV Washington, for an interview that was completely on the record but in which, by prearrangement, the President's voice was never broadcast. The group used a brief film shot of the President and the panelists to open the program and then a crawl giving the President's answers, word for word on key news points, as taken from a transcript. Then, in the program's customary style, the panelists discussed the answers.

Nonuse of the President's voice was one of the White House ground rules according to Richard A. Moore, lawyer, broadcast station owner and associate producer of the show. He said that there was "nothing wrong" with the President's voice and that he didn't know why the ban was imposed. "We just accepted it," he said. Whatever the reason, Moore said, the President—and The McLaughlin Group—got a lot of mileage out of the approach. He said the group was free not only to use but to distribute the transcript—and that it freely did so, with resultant pickups (particularly for the President's comments about Fidel Castro and Central America) on newscasts on all three TV networks and in newspapers across the country.

The 70-minute interview was conducted at the invitation of the White House, at a breakfast meeting July 29. On hand for the questioning were Moore and John McLaughlin, producer/moderator of the program, regular panelists Bob Novak, Jack Germond and Pat Buchanan, and columnist Georgie Anne Geyer, sitting in for Morton Kondracke. The entire session was audio-taped, but only a few moments were filmed or taped, for showing at the opening of the broadcast. Moore sees this approach as a new and innovative use of media by the President, as well as the first time, in his recollection, that the President had undertaken such an interview session for a local program.

The McLaughlin Group is carried on WRC-TV Saturdays at 7:30 p.m., with a repeat the next day preceding NBC-TV's Meet the Press. In addition, beginning next fall it will be distributed to PBS stations (with additional material to cover the commercials seen on WRC-TV). Moore is a former head of KTV(TV) Los Angeles, was a White House attorney during the Nixon administration and is now a Washington attorney and a part owner of KOKI-TV Tulsa, Okla.

Pan American problems

CBS Sports officials said last week they expect to cover the Pan American Games in Caracas, Venezuela, later this month as planned, but it was a close call. When Terry O'Neil, CBS's executive producer for the games, arrived in Caracas a week ago, the broadcast center, being provided by Venezuela as host country for the games, was essentially an empty building in which some partitions had been put up. No equipment was on the premises or, for the most part, even in the country.

By the middle of last week, however,
O'Neill was recommending to CBS Sports officials that they proceed with their original plans for 16 hours of coverage of the quadrennial event. He said he had been assured by Van Vactor that all necessary equipment would be there, including all the basic necessities by the end of last week—more than a week before the games open Aug. 14. Ampex videotape machines were due for delivery by air from Miami by the end of the week, mobile units and cameras by sea from Spain last Wednesday and other equipment by air from Spain a day or so later. Venezuela is purchasing the equipment for use first during the games and for its own use after that.

CBS, which is paying close to $1 million for the TV rights, expects to have about 50 people on hand to produce the coverage in association with an independent firm, F&P Productions of Tampa, Fla. The coverage, some live and some on tape, will concentrate primarily on major Olympics sports, such as boxing, basketball, track and field, swimming and gymnastics. The 16 hours will be spread across five Saturday and Sunday afternoons—Aug. 14, 20, 21, 26 and 28—with the opener Aug. 14 at 3:30 p.m. NYT. CBS also covered the last two Pan Am Games, in Mexico City in 1975 and San Juan, P.R., in 1979.

Adding entertainment

Multimedia Program Productions, the Cincinnati-based division of the Multimedia Inc. communications conglomerate, has changed its name to Multimedia Entertainment to reflect its own diversification, notably its involvement in the new Sports Time all-sports cable service. Multimedia Entertainment will produce—through a new division of its own, Multimedia Sports Productions—all events seen on Sports Time, which was created by Anheuser-Busch, Multimedia and Tele-Communications Inc. and is due for launch next April (Broadcasting, July 25). William H. Spiegel, program director of Multimedia's WLTW-TV Cincinnati and also in charge of all of the station's sports programming, has been named general manager of Multimedia Sports Productions, which is expected to employ about 30 people and produce 350 to 400 live sports events a year for the Sports Time pay cable service. Multimedia Entertainment also announced plans for two new two-hour TV specials to add to its claim to be "the world's largest producer of country music programming." One, Janie Fricke: You Ought To Be In Pictures, stars the Country Music Association's female vocalist of the year, with appearances also by Alabama, Ronnie Milsap, Rosanne Cash, Charlie Pride, Gordon MacRae and others, and will be produced by Jim Gates of Multimedia Entertainment. The other, Country Gold, presents T.G. Sheppard, Tanya Tucker, Sylvia, Ricky Skaggs, Waylon Jennings, Janie Fricke and other country music stars performing gold record hits. Both specials will be syndicated for airing this fall as part of Multimedia's "Country Come Alive" package.

More soap

CBS-TV has expanded its production orders for two of its most popular prime time series, Dallas and Falcon Crest. The network notified affiliates late last month that it will increase the number of episodes ordered from 28 to 30 for Dallas and from 22 to 28 for Falcon Crest. Original episodes of the two Friday night dramas have fared significantly better in the ratings, compared with repeats.

New news

WABC-TV New York will be expanding its local evening news coverage beginning Aug. 15 when it premieres a 30-minute program at 4:30 p.m. called Eyewitness Extra. The show, which will feature more features than hard news, will be hosted by WABC-TV news anchors Ernie Anastos and Roseanne Scamardella. The station will drop The People's Court, which will move to WNBC-TV New York in September.

Translator turn-down

The FCC has denied Family Television Corp. review of staff action returning its application for a new UHF TV translator at Fort Myers, Fla. The Mass Media Bureau returned the application because it was filed after the commission imposed its low-power television application freeze, and the application didn't qualify under freeze exemptions.

Family, however, had asked for a waiver of the freeze policy, noting that its application didn't seek local origination authority, but only proposed to retransmit its full-service UHF station, WFTS-TV, Tampa, Fla. The FCC, however, noting that enough LPTV applications were coming in under freeze exemptions as it is, said it wouldn't be in the public interest to accept Family's application.

Tuesday verdict appeal

The American Federation of Television and Radio Artists last Monday (Aug. 1) argued its appeal on a judgment made in a federal court on appeals case challenging the union last year by a U.S. district court jury in San Diego. Attorneys for AFTRA argued before a three-judge appeals tribunal at the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in Los Angeles, which also heard statements from attorneys representing San Diego-based Tuesday Productions, which would receive $3.9 million in damages if the verdict is upheld.

AFTRA is claiming it should have been exempt from such federal antitrust suits and that mistakes were made in determining the amount of damages to be assessed. The union also alleged that "hearsay" testimony had been improperly admitted as evidence in the 1982 trial.

Tuesday, a producer of jingles and broadcast production music, has claimed AFTRA kept the union firm out of national and regional markets, in a conspiracy with major advertisers and network TV.

A decision by the appeals court is not expected until at least October. Last week's oral arguments have no bearing on separate proceedings in New York, where AFTRA is awaiting action on a bankruptcy petition filed last November in a move interpreted as an attempt to protect its assets, which the 60,000-member union estimated last fall to be about $3 million.

Texas switch

KWXT-TV Waco, Tex., and its satellite, KFTK-TV Bryan, will switch from primary affiliation with ABC-TV to full-time affiliation with CBS-Television on Sept. 1. The two-station combination, owned by KWXT Broadcasting Co., delivers 56,000 prime time homes in central Texas and will be competing with one other station, NBC affiliate KCEN-TV Temple, until later this year, when a UHF station is scheduled to go on the air. KWXT-TV and KFTK-TV had formerly been CBS affiliates, but switched to ABC in 1978. KWXT Broadcasting, also owns KLTY-TV Lafayette, La., and KLXT-TV Ardmore, Okla., both CBS affiliates.

In the marketplace

Lexington Broadcast Services will take over the sale of barter minutes on two television series syndicated by Golden West Television, The Richard Simmons Show and Women to Woman. One daily minute is available for barter on the latter series in about 35 markets, and two-and-a-half minutes daily on Simmons, clearing about 170 stations.

MCA Television International has acquired international distribution rights to Donkey Kong, an animated children's series to premiere on CBS-TV this September. The package of 13 half-hours is from Ruby-Spears Productions and is based on the popular video arcade game.

Filming has started in Tunisia on A.D., a new mini-series describing the birth of Christianity following the death of Christ. It is a co-production of Procter & Gamble and International Film Productions, Inc. The program, to be sponsored entirely by P&G, will air on NBC-TV during the 1984-85 season. The mini-series, third in a trilogy recounting the evolution of the Christian religion, stars Burt Lancaster, Julie Christie, Irene Cara, Jack Warden, Ben Vereen and Sada Thompson.

Independent producer Jay Bernstein, in association with Columbia Pictures Television, will begin production this month of Mickey Spillane's Mike Hammer, a two-hour made-for-television movie for CBS-TV that is scheduled to be spun off into a weekly prime time series on the network following the movie's broadcast during the 1983-84 season. Air dates have not been set for the productions, which will star Stacy Keach as detective Mike Hammer.

The Hollywood-based production team of Paul Radin, Michael Berk and Douglas Schwartz—known as BSR Productions—has been signed by 20th Century-Fox Television to a multiyear contract to create one-hour series, mini-series and motion pictures for television. Collectively, the trio has produced more than a dozen long-form features for network television, including The Incredible Journey of Dr. Meg Lauret, a made-for-television movie that earned a 28.9 rating and 42 share when broadcast by CBS-TV in 1979.

A look at network news anchors

Barbara Matusow’s new book examines the growing importance these journalists hold.

The attention focused on the death and funeral of ABC News anchor Frank Reynolds (Broadcasting, July 25) provides a kind of eulogy to Barbara Matusow’s “The Evening Stars: The Making of a Network News Anchor” [Houghton Mifflin, $14.95]. It provides a neat fit with Matusow’s detailed account of the glory and the power that are the evening anchor’s. And so with the news of Roger Mudd’s removal as co-anchor of NBC Nightly News (Broadcasting, Aug. 1).

The broadcast time devoted to news of Reynolds’s death, particularly on ABC but on NBC and CBS as well, suggested a national political or religious leader had passed on. The presence of President and Mrs. Reagan at the funeral did nothing to diminish that impression.

And, in a real sense, Matusow suggests, the network anchors are figures of national importance. They “have become so powerful,” she writes, “that they can cause the careers of correspondents to blossom or fade or they can derail the careers of executives to whom they nominally report.” In the process, they help set the national agenda, not only by the play they give the news on their shows but also through the influence they exert throughout the news organizations for which they work.

The frenzy of the competition among networks for star-quality journalists to serve as anchor is no longer news. But Matusow helps put it in perspective. A case in point was ABC News’s President Roone Arledge’s passionate courtship of Dan Rather, in the days before CBS chose him to succeed Walter Cronkite. Rather would not only have been the chief correspondent and principal presence on the World News Tonight, he would anchor 20/20 and do as many pieces for it as he could. He would also anchor documentaries, special programs and all major live events and, if he chose, the late-night program ABC was planning (it turned out to be Nightline) as well. The money for Rather wasn’t bad either—almost $2 million a year.

It seemed more than CBS could possibly match, but it did. It had the CBS News tradition dating back to Edward R. Murrow as an inducement. That and a job as the Evening News’s sole anchor, plus the number-one spot in special events, documentaries and various other programs, a firm date on replacing Cronkite and a contact valued at close to $25 million over a 10-year period, did the trick.

Rather is not alone in receiving such princely treatment. Matusow notes that NBC made a similar offer that couldn’t be refused to retain Tom Brokaw when Arledge was after him. The $1 million annual salary ABC-TV president Fred Pierce authorized as part of the effort to lure Barbara Walters away from NBC no longer raises any eyebrows.

For all the glamour and money, not to mention power, involved in being an anchor, it is not always an exciting job, according to Matusow, whose career includes tours as a writer and producer with CBS and NBC in New York as well as NBC and ABC stations in Washington. For while the post is usually awarded to experienced reporters, “anchors spend very little time in the field.”

Reading Matusow’s book in the wake of the developments of the past couple of weeks offers some ironies. There were the ABC officials’ eulogies of Reynolds, for instance. Reynolds, a feisty, proud journalist, was described by Matusow as less than enchanted with the way in which Arledge, after taking over at ABC News, undercut him with producers by constantly making critical remarks about him.” Matusow also recorded Reynolds’s reaction to the remarks of Dick Wald soon after Wald joined ABC News as vice president and journeyed from New York to Washington to meet the staff there and made “what Reynolds thought were condescending remarks”: “The more Reynolds listened, the madder he got. Finally Reynolds rose to say that he and his colleagues had no apology for their work, and if Wald thought he was some kind of saviour, he could forget it.” By time of his death, evidently, ABC brass recognized Reynolds’s star quality.

Then there are the concerns that ABC News President Reuven Frank expressed to Matusow regarding the expanding power of the anchors. “Producers are nothing more than chief operators today,” Frank is quoted as saying. At one time, he said, the producer was the principal editor. In the 1970’s, management started to intervene. “‘Then,’ he said, ‘management started giving away editorial control to the talent. The anchors are running things today.’”

But not without check, apparently. For all the power and the glory of the anchors and the authority given them to put their stamp on a network’s news operations, they are not immortal, no matter what their contracts say. Frank, the man who appeared dismayed over the power of the anchors in his comments to Matusow, participated in the management discussions that led to the removal two weeks ago of Roger Mudd as co-anchor of the Nightly News. Ratings, it seems, still control.

HBO's Biondi brings financial flair to pay cable programming

He heads the most conspicuous cable programming service in the country, and has been called everything from "a quiet corporate insider" to "the most powerful man in the movie business." But Frank Biondi, president of Home Box Office, sees himself a little differently. A business analyst who worked for five different employers in 10 years and who purposefully eschewed big corporations for "mavericks," Biondi has a favorite word to describe himself and his career: "adraditional."

When Time Inc., HBO's parent, elevated Biondi to the HBO presidency last February, it picked an executive whose background was in finance rather than in marketing or programming. Biondi had spent four years in the background on the administrative side of HBO's programming, coordinating budgets, research and business affairs.

Biondi may have been a prescient choice. HBO is showing as much savvy in investment banking these days as it is in pay cable programming. To insure itself steady sources of original programming—and exclusive pay cable rights to theatricals—HBO has, with Biondi's help, embarked on several financial ventures, including Tri-Star Pictures, the HBO-CBS-Columbia Pictures Industries joint venture to create a major studio producing 12-18 pictures annually. Then there's Silver Screen Partners, a $125-million public offering to raise money for another dozen films annually, in which HBO is a one-third limited partner. Prior to those deals, HBO had agreed to underwrite costs of Columbia and Orion Pictures productions in exchange for exclusive pay cable rights.

After graduating from Princeton in 1966 Biondi was offered the choice of law school or business school, and chose the latter—Harvard. After business school, "it was clear I had a pretty decent facility with numbers," Biondi recalls, and he took a job in the investment banking division of the predecessor of Prudential-Bache Securities. Although he was interviewed at CBS, Biondi says he had no desire to work in a large organization "and start down the road of the various and sundry pecking orders through CBS." After six months, however, when he saw that Bache was not going to build its banking capability, "I took off."

Biondi then joined a small investment banking firm. "And to show you how traditional it was, five days after I got there they changed their name." The firm lost partners, gained others, merged, and eventually was absorbed into what is today Shearson/ American Express. Biondi spent two years in investment banking, "but I could see the same thing that happened at Bache: It was becoming a big warehouse." A number of the partners agreed, and when they left to work for a small venture capital firm, he was asked to follow. Eventually, Biondi established a semi-independent status with the firm. It was at this time that he learned, through Clarence Jones, a major shareholder in Inner City Broadcasting, that Teleprompter, the MSO, was "looking for some new financial management." (This was long before the company's acquisition by Westinghouse.) Biondi contacted Teleprompter and was hired as a consultant and later, for a brief period, went on the payroll as the mergers and acquisitions specialist.

For Biondi, it was not one of his happier employments. The company was being investigated, and trading in its stock eventually was suspended, for securities fraud based on events that took place before he arrived.

But there was an unexpected virtue in the Teleprompter service. "The nice part was I met my wife," Carol Oughton, who worked in the Teleprompter franchising department.

Biondi then returned to consulting. "I had built up a tremendous knowledge about the cable business, and it was obvious things were starting to happen," he recalls. Eventually, Biondi was offered two jobs: one with Gus Hauser at Warner Cable and another with the Children's Television Workshop. He chose the latter, he says, because the work-shop was just beginning to invest in cable systems—a function he understood. "Three months after I got there they decided they weren't going to invest in cable any more, and instead were going into the movie business—which I knew nothing about at that time." He stayed on, however, to learn about motion pictures.

It had been while Biondi was at Teleprompter that he met Nick Nicholas Jr., then Time Inc.'s assistant treasurer and head of financial analysis for nonpublishing activities. Nicholas was in charge of selling Time's cable property—Manhattan Cable Television—and had met with Teleprompter's Biondi about a possible deal. "The city of New York would not transfer the cable franchise," Biondi recalls, "which forced Time to stay in the cable business." No deal was made, but Nicholas and Biondi kept in touch. Meanwhile, one of his wife's best friends was dating a young lawyer named Michael Fuchs. They became good friends.

Fuchs one day called Biondi at CTW and told him he had taken a job with HBO. "It's a great job," Biondi recalled saying to Fuchs telling him, "but I don't know anything about the cable business. Tell me about it."

They met for lunch, and Biondi says he told Fuchs: "HBO is a great idea, but the thing that bothers me about the company is it's a middleman. It's too vulnerable between the cable guys, who are quasimonopolists in their market, on the one hand, and the movie companies, who are few enough in number that they're ultimately going to wear you down." Biondi said: "That appealed to Fuchs's sensibility."

Later, Biondi got another call from Fuchs, who suggested a meeting between Biondi and other HBO executives for a possible job opening. When they offered him a film buyer's position, Biondi declined.

Another 18 months passed. Fuchs called again offering a job. Biondi said Fuchs couldn't quite describe it, but the latest offer was "part co-production, part children's programming, part planning—we'll figure out the rest when you get here," Fuchs said. It was October 1978, and Biondi had joined a large corporation.

Biondi, who now has a corner office on the seventh floor of the Time-Life Building, says that HBO when he arrived was a small business within a larger one, and that thought did not make him uncomfortable. What drew him was "smart people who did things differently."

Biondi is 38. He doesn't like to speculate about what's next, but he seems, perhaps for the first time in his career, comfortable. In five years? "I would be very happy if I'm right here." He notes he wants to be around to see all that he's helped construct pay off—Tri-Star, Silver Screen, Orion. He remarked the other day: "It's a very difficult place to leave." Although, he adds, "I could hardly preach that given my own background."
Network sources are divided as to interest networks might have in getting into syndication (see page 27). Some virtually dismissed it as unlikely prospect, others felt there would be definitely profitable market in syndication of movies, made-for-TV movies, specials and, perhaps more in Europe than in U.S., news and documentary programs. Those who minimized syndication prospect felt that backbone of inventory would have to be first-run syndication programs and noted that, even in 'pre-rules days, networks seldom—or never—produced for syndication alone. As for profit shares in programs produced by others, network sources said that although many years ago that in years immediately preceding rules, they got closer to 25%—or less. There was no consensus on what percentage they might go for in future, but there seemed good deal of feeling it would take hard bargaining for them to get much, if anything, from major producers and such leading independents as Norman Lear. As one network official put it: "If Paramount brought us a program, I can't see them giving us a percentage of the profit too." Chances would be much better, according to this reasoning, with smaller, underfinanced producers who "really need the money."

With recent passing of Frank Reynolds, who was considered chief among equals of ABC's 'World News Tonight's three-man anchor team, decision has been made to revert back to one-anchor format. Insiders confirm that ABC's Peter Jennings has been only serious contender for sole-anchor position since decision was made. It's likely he will be named to that position in week or two assuming contract talks proceed without hitch. Jennings' 20 years of network news experience has been cited as giving him decisive edge over Max Robinson, who has been Chicago-based anchor for 'World News Tonight since 1978. Robinson is currently in talks with network about his future role with ABC News, presumably as senior-level correspondent.

Mark Monsky resigned Tuesday (Aug. 2) as president of Metromedia News. Sources within company said Monsky, who, since October 1982, has been preparing for launch of daily, hour-long nationally syndicated prime time newscast, had run afoul with upper management for too much financial outlay toward project and not enough progress toward getting show on air. Dick Block, executive vice president, Metromedia Television, declined to comment on Monsky's departure except to say news executive, who ends 13-year tenure at Metromedia's WNEW-TV New York, "made a great contribution to this company." Metromedia "is on course on the objectives we set up" toward launching Prime Time News said Block, who confirmed company continues talks with NBC News political correspondent Roger Mudd, recently reassigned from NBC Nightly News anchor position, about possibility of anchoring Prime Time News. Block said he probably will not replace Monsky, but will himself oversee Metromedia's news operations. There had been speculation last week that James Tishle, former news VP at Metromedia's WCBS-TV Boston and now professor of journalism at Boston University, might be tapped for position.

Daytime race among networks is getting hotter. For week of July 25, according to NBC, CBS and ABC tied with 6.7 rating, while NBC scored 5.5, closest it has been to competition in five years. In shares, CBS had 24, ABC 23 and NBC 20—closest NBC has been to ABC since March 1980.

National Association of Broadcasters last week announced makeup of its Structure Study Committee (formed to examine "federation" plan to reorganize NAB into radio and television divisions under umbrella organization), in form modified from original expectations (BROADCASTING, July 18). Although seven members had been planned, balance of committee at six, with two radio and two television representatives—in addition to co-chairmen—and presence of major broadcasting figure in Dudley Taft, obviated need for seventh member, according to Joint Board Chairman Gert Schmidt. Two of those originally tapped—Don Curran, Field Communications, and Robert King, Robert K. King & Associates—declined to serve. Committee members, in addition to previously named co-chairmen Martin Beck, radio board chairman, and Jerry Holley, television board chairman, are: Arnold S. Lerner, WLLH Inc., Lowell, Mass., W. Frank Harden, State Telecasting, Columbia, S.C.; Stanley W. McKenzie, Seguin Broadcasting, Seguin, Tex., and Dudley S. Taft, Taft Broadcasting, Cincinnati.

Nine public TV stations have netted total of more than $3.7 million from advertising sales and "enhanced underwriting," during 15-month advertising experiment, according to third progress report, issued by National Association of Public Television Stations. Breakdown of earnings gives $3 million to six stations which actively sold ads messages and $767,000 to two stations carrying enhanced underwriting. Ninth participant, WLMTV Erie, Pa., posted $15,000 loss for year. WCIU virtually abandoned ad sales effort following management change in November 1982. Direct expenses for selling ads ran at about 30% of gross revenues, as did expenses for enhanced underwriting. Report, issued at end of July, shortly after announcing plans for the divestiture and, according to Brown, AT&T spent $30 million to popularize it. AT&T will retain the American Bell logo, a circle with horizontal strips which is supposed to represent "a world gridled by electronic communications."

The divestiture is not entirely voluntary. It is the essence of a consent decree worked out by AT&T and the Justice Department a year ago to put an end to the Justice Department antitrust suit against AT&T filed during the early days of the Ford Administration in November 1974. At the same time it fragments the Bell system, the consent decree gives AT&T considerable freedom to compete in the rapidly growing and dynamic telecommunications marketplace. "It won't be easy and it certainly won't be without risk, but I am entirely confident we have the resources to be what we intend to become," said Brown, reading from a prepared text. "We have the Bell Telephone Laboratories. We have the Western Electric Co. and the professional marketing organizations to sell and service our products and systems. We have in the U.S. an intercity network which is the heart as well as the pulse of the world's best phone system. And most important of all in the long run, we have an abundance of human talent. ... In the old world, under the old rules, AT&T was the leader. We expect to remain the leader in the new world we face."
ays all nine stations had minimal community reactions to advertising or underwriting messages. And five of six stations’ available subscription billies report increased subscriber income from 1982 to 1983 (between low of 3% and high of 12.4%). Stations selling ad messages were: WPBT-TV Miami; WHYY-TV Philadelphia; WYES-TV New Orleans; KCMX-TV San Mateo, Calif.; WPRTV Muncie, Ind.; and WTTR-TV Chicago. Stations offering enhanced underwriting were: WNEDTV New York and WEDVT Pittsburgh.

IBC-TV has signed KOLTV Mitchell (Sioux Falls), S.D., as affiliate, effective Aug. 22. Channel five station, owned by Dakotaland Broadcasting Corp., Sherwood L. Corner, president, replaces channel 13, KSTV Sioux Falls, which, with two satellites, moves from NBC-TV to ABC-TV under deal announced last winter (“Telecasts,” Feb. 28).

Although not official, promotions are due for three ABC Entertainment executives: Ann Daniel, VP-dramatic series development, will be elevated to VP-prime time series development, Gus Lucas, VP-program planning and scheduling and assistant to senior VP-prime time, will be named VP-assistant to ABC Entertainment president Lewis Erlicht, Ted Harbert, director of program planning and scheduling, to VP-program planning and scheduling. Erlicht’s old position—VP-prime time programming—is disappearing. Duties will continue to be carried by Erlicht and others. Reason for reorganization was described as move to keep Erlicht “more closely involved with people in charge.”

Board of Broadcast Capital Fund (BROADCAP), nonprofit venture capital company established by National Association of Broadcasters to assist minorities in acquisition and ownership of broadcast properties, announced $1.35 million in new investment commitments last week. Funds will go to KLJK-TV Longview, Tex., to finance construction of network affiliated UHF television station there. Spanish Broadcasting Systems, New York, to purchase AM station to serve New York/New Jersey area, and Mason Broadcasting Co., for purchase of FM station in South Carolina. Board also passed resolution authorizing $5 million fundraising campaign directed toward nonnetwork contributors.

ABC says it has written total of $1.9 billion on books for upfront TV sales next season, including daytime, news, prime time, children’s, Olympics and World Series. Figure compares to $2.3 billion that ABC recorded in calendar 1982 for its total TV and radio sales.

CBS Radio will begin satellite delivery of programming via Satcom I-R next Monday (Aug. 15) to affiliates of both its traditional radio network and young adult-oriented RadioRadio network, which have had earth dishes installed. CBS will still retain linear transmission but plans to have all programs delivered via satellite by Jan. 1.

CBS-TV said its programs and personalities received 133 nominations for prime time Emmy awards—“more than any other network ever,” and almost as many as CBS-TV and ABC-TV combined. CBS received 73 nominations, ABC 68, PBS 29 and syndicators 13.

CBS’s leader was Hill Street Blues, with 17. Awards, given by Academy of Television Arts and Sciences, will be presented both at Hollywood banquet Sept. 16 and on NBC telecast Sept. 25.

Montgomery N. (Monty) McKinney, chairman of Chiat-Day, Los Angeles, has been named chairman of DDB/West, Los Angeles. McKinney had served Doyle Dane Bernbach in its Los Angeles office from 1957 to 1976, serving as senior VP in charge of client services, when he resigned to form Chiat-Day with Jay Chiat, president of that agency.

Friends of National Public Radio, recently formed independent citizens’ fundraising group to help financially troubled network, announced last week it has received $107,000 in response to two

July swept to CBS. With a slightly bigger lead than it captured last July, CBS-TV appears to have won the July local ratings sweeps, completed last Tuesday and Wednesday (Aug. 2-3) by Arbitron and A.C. Nielsen. NBC-TV, which last year trailed second-ranked ABC-TV by two rating points, turned the tables and bettered ABC by a full rating point in Arbitron’s rating period and six-tenths of a point in Nielsen’s.

The results cited are preliminary, and reflect averages of daily results from Nielsen’s National Television Index computed for both the Arbitron rating period (July 5-Aug. 2) and the Nielsen period (July 7-Aug. 3). Final national results, which will reflect local results in more than 200 markets for each service, could differ slightly.

CBS, which aired more original programming in its prime time slot (23%) than NBC (18%) but less than ABC (34%), averaged a 13 rating/25 share in the Arbitron period and a 13/25 in Nielsen’s, which improved its performance by 15% over that of last July’s in Arbitron’s sweep period and by 12% in Nielsen’s, averaged a 12.2/24 and an 11.9/23 respectively. ABC averaged an 11.2/22 in Arbitron down 11% from its performance a year ago and 11.2/22 in Nielsen, down 15% from a year ago.

CBS aired the top five regularly scheduled programs during the sweep period and the highest-rated prime time special, The Miss Universe Pageant (22/6/38). It also aired the highest-rated prime time documentary in the 1982-83 network TV season—The Plane That Fell From the Sky (15/3/28). NBC had the sixth, seventh and ninth highest-rated regularly scheduled programs, CBS aired the eighth and ABC the 10th.

Although the three networks lost a point in their combined share of audience, slipping from a 71 in July 1982 to a 70 this year, they maintained a combined average rating (36.4) about the same as that of a year ago (36.5). The level of homes using television was up, with the total network audience also up, from 29,760,000 to 30,320,000.

June newspaper ads—in New York Times and Washington Post—signed primarily by media personalities. Representatives of group plan to meet with NPR officials this week to turn over funds which, according to FNPR scretary Ann Smith, will be used for programming. Former Senator Dick Clark (D-Iowa) heads organization (Broadcasting, July 4).

Friday Night Videos late-night weekly entertainment program that premiered on NBC-TV on July 5, scored highest rating of any NBC show in 12:30 a.m. time slot since Midnight Special featured appearance by entertainer Paul Anka in January 1977. Average rating for 90-minute Video was 5.5/26.

Inter American Satellite Television, Rupert Murdoch-backed DBS venture, is moving from temporary offices at Murdoch’s New York Post in Manhattan to permanent quarters in Harmon Cove industrial park, owned by Hertz Mountain Industries, in Secaucus, N.J. Lease for 60,000 square feet of office space is expected to be signed this week. Five 5.5-meter earth stations for uplinking five channels of programming to SBS III will be located near office. Meanwhile, IAST seems to have revealed name it will use to market service. House ad in Aug. 3 issue of New York Post read: “Skyband. Satellite television program service, bringing you the best in television viewing. Look for it this fall.”

Frank Gregg Kear Sr., 79, telecommunications consultant and founder of former Kear & Kennedy, Washington communications consulting firm, died July 22 at Sunnyvale, Calif., nursing home. He suffered from Alzheimer’s disease.

Leslie Corn, director of programming for CBS’s Radio/TV network, is said to be leaving post at end of month with duties to be absorbed by other executives. According to source, move is part of CBS Radio’s decision to reduce staff force by two-to-five by year’s end.
Nibbling the bullet

It is not entirely clear what the FCC did last week to its rules that for 13 years have kept television networks out of domestic program syndication and denied them financial interests in programs they buy from others for network play. The official report, issued several hours after the commission voted, provided only a hazy and semiliterate description of the action. Judgments must be deferred until the formal order is available, perhaps this week.

It would appear, however, that the FCC has "tentatively" decided to let networks bargain with producers for financial interests on any scale. It would also admit networks to foreign syndication of any programing they can lay their hands on and to domestic syndication of any kind of programing except entertainment series that have had network play between 7 and 11 p.m. There are restrictions aimed at the prevention of warehousing.

Not unexpectedly, the Committee for Prudent Deregulation, a euphemism for the inner circles at the Polo Lounge and Ma Maison, as represented by Jack Valenti at a preferred table in Lion d'Or, has called the FCC action a stab in the back. The major suppliers of network programs would be certain to find negotiations more difficult in a free market.

Cries of equal anguish may be expected from the Association of Program Distributors, if the commission action turns out to be what it seemed to be last week. The members of that association feared above all the entry of networks in the syndication market with programing that would compete with the vehicles that APD members sell.

The Association of Independent Television Stations withheld comment last week, hoping, obviously, that the final order would confirm the protection against warehousing that was promised in preliminary reports.

The networks expressed varying degrees of discreet disappointment that the action fell short of outright repeal of the rules. There was no sign, however, that a final ruling would be resisted if it conformed to the general perception of what the "tentative" action had been.

In a way, the major producers may have themselves to thank for the way the FC has provisionally resolved this most controversial of recent initiatives. Back in May, during 10 hours of oral presentations by antagonists before the FCC, Valenti and others from his camp narrowed the debate to the principal question: Would repeal give the networks both the power and incentive to manipulate syndication in favor of themselves and their affiliates? As Valenti distilled the issue: "This war is being waged by the networks to demolish the one foe they fear, the independent television stations." If the warehousing he deplored is indeed prevented by the measures the FCC now has in mind, his principal argument of last May is blunted. In more recent comments, however, the producers have emphasized what they see as a threat to their creative control and incentive to innovate if the networks can bargain their way into financial participation.

It has been apparent for some time, as the cost and intensity of the campaign for and against repeal escalated, that compromise was the probable outcome. The compromise reached by the FCC last week will be resisted and may not emerge in final form without change. Not only that, the opponents of any modification of the existing rules are certain to carry on their campaign for congressional intrusion in the process.

The guess here, as stated months ago, is that when all is said and done, nobody will be entirely happy, but the rules will have been relaxed.

It is not as though this action will be the sum of FCC revisions of its present regulations. As recounted by Chairman Mark Fowler in an interview with BROADCASTING last week, other changes of significance are in prospect. Some will alter market powers that now obtain. For example, a liberalization of the multiple ownership rules could create station groups with enormously expanded roles in supplying and consuming programing. The marketplace of 13 years ago is already a relic and is headed for the status of an archeological dig.

Return to reason

The bill approved last week by the Senate Commerce Committee to extend the authorization of the Federal Trade Commission contains distinct improvements in existing law. For one thing, it considerably narrows the FTC's power to kill advertising on a subjective finding of unfairness. For another, it repeals the commission's authority to pay for public participation in rulemakings. Both provisions in the present law have been grossly abused.

Under the bill emerging from committee, an act or practice could not be judged unfair unless it "causes or is likely to cause substantial injury to consumers which is not reasonably avoidable by consumers themselves and not outweighed by countervailing benefits to consumers or competition." The English in that passage could be substantially improved, but the idea is clear enough. If that had been the law back in 1978, the FTC could not have undertaken its campaign to put an end to the children's television advertising that its chairman of the moment hated. (The children's TV episode was one of the regulatory excesses that bought the FTC the restraints that the committee has now adopted.)

The new authorization bill would also put an end to the FTC's compensation for participation in rulemakings. That, if law, would have been another disincentive to the children's television proceeding. The same professional agitators who encouraged the FTC to take that one on were paid large sums for participating in the rulemaking they had been instrumental in precipitating. As long as the existing authorization is on the books, it is a permanent invitation for self-appointed representatives of the "public" to stir up regulatory action that will pay their keep.

The refinements that the Commerce Committee adopted fell short of those that advertising interests had wanted. They are, however, worth supporting on the rest of this legislative journey.

"It's the man from the consulting firm. He just saw our ratings."
